U.S. Officials Say CIA Directed Two Nicaragua Air Raids

By Philip Taubman New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - Two zir strikes against Nicaragua in February were directed by the U.S. Contral Intelligence Agency with the help of specially trained Latin Americans, and not by Nicaraguan rebels as first reported, U.S. offi-

The attacks against a radio transmitter reportedly used by Salvadoran guerrillas and a military camp, in which four Nicaraguans were killed, took place Feb. 2 in the northwestern province of Chinan-

The Reagan administration has not acknowledged direct U.S. involvement in the air attacks.

Just after the attacks, the Nicaraguan government said that A-37 attack bombers and Cessna propel-ler aircraft, which were given by the CIA to the counterrevolutionaries," had carried out the raids. Nicaragua complained to the United Nations Security Council, which took no action after considering the Last year, U.S. officials in Central America said the CIA was using a Salvadoran Air Force base and some Salvadoran pilots to transport supplies to U.S.-backed rebels in Nicaragua. The Reagan administration has also confirmed a U.S. role in the mining of Nicaraguan harbors. Another vessel was reportedly damaged by a mine Vednesday.

[Meanwhile, Nicaraguan and Costa Rican forces fought a firece 30-minute battle Thursday at a border outpost, United Press International reported from San Jose,

[The fighting occurred at Penas liancas, a customs post 170 miles 274 kilometers) north of San Jose. There was no indication of casualties on either side, Costa Rican of-ficials said, adding that the shoot-ing apparently involved only mail-arms fire.

The country's Civil Guard responded to shooting initiated from Vicaraguan Army positions, the officials said, and acted on an order from President Luis Alberto Monge that "all attacks must be repelled with the recourses available to the civil guard." Costa Rica has no standing army.

[There was no immediate comment from Nicaragua, which has asserted that Costa Rica has allowed rebels of the Democratic Revolutionary Alliance, led by the former Sandinist hero Eden Pastora Gomez, to operate freely on its territory. Costa Rica has denied the allegation.]

When the air attacks took place, Nicaraguan rebels supported by the CIA claimed responsibility for them, but the rebels have since disavowed a role.

In discussions in Honduras with a delegation of U.S. congressmen, guerrilla representatives said last weekend that they were ordered to take credit for the agency's opera-tion, two congressional Democrats said Wednesday.

After Representative Bill Alexander of Arkansas and Representative Wyche Fowler Jr. of Georgia reported on their meeting, U.S. of-ficials confirmed privately that the air raids had been conducted in a manner similiar to the way the CIA organized the mining of Nicaraguan harbors.

Nicaraguan rebels, they said, were not involved in the air strikes. Instead, the officials added, the agency trained a group of Latin Americans to carry out several air attacks from bases in Honduras and El Salvador, including the two raids on Feb. 2. The officials declined to provide any additional information about the identities of the pilots or to specify when other attacks took place.

The planes and bombs used in the attacks on Feb. 2 and in other raids, the officials said, were pro-vided by the CIA. The officials said the air attacks were planned and supervised in Honduras and El Salvador by Americans working for

Pentagon Offers $13.9 Billion in Cuts but Warns Of 'Damage'

By Fred S. Hoffman The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger reluctantly proposed to Congress on Thursday $13.9 billion in cuts in the military budget, but he warned they would damage the administration's plans to rebuild U.S. arms strength.

"You can't make these reductions without some damage," Mr. Weinberger said at a news conference before he spoke to the Senate

Armed Services Committee.

The proposals, which result from weeks of debate in the Pentagon. calls for, among other things, reductions in the number of new M-1 tanks, infantry fighting vehicles, attack helicopters, anti-tank and air combat missiles, torpedoes and an army defense gun, called Divad, which critics say does not work.

The revisions would lower defense budget authority for fiscal 1985 to $291.1 billion, representing "real growth" of 7.8 percent in-stead of the 13 percent contemplat-ed in the original budget that went to Congress early this year.

Spending next year, beginning Oct. 1, would be cut from the earlier proposed level by $5.8 billion, to a total of $258.6 billion.

Besides trimming military spending, the Republican plan, yet to be approved by the entire Sen-ate, includes cutting nonmilitary spending and taking action to close loopholes in tax laws. That plan would trim deficits by $144 billion. When the Republican deficit-reduction plan was unveiled in mid-March, Mr. Reagan defended it, saying the proposed military buildup would be somewhat slow "but not the point of unacceptable risk."

Mr. Weinberger made it clear that he was offering the suggested military cuts for the fiscal 1985 budget only under duress. "They are not made because the original budget was too large," he The suggested cuts would also stretch out the purchases of air force F-16 fighters, navy F-18 fighters, air force C-5B transport planes, one nuclear-powered Los Angeles-class attack submarine and a resupply ship.

was intervening in support of Mr. Duarte, Mr. Speakes said, "No." In an additional charge against the embassy, the alliance's candidate for vice president, Hugo Barrera, said that the U.S. govern-ment's chief technical adviser to El Salvador's Central Elections Council had personally issued death threats against party representatives on the council. The party, known by its Spanish acronym ARENA, always has had sense relations with the U.S. Embassy. Salvadoran political analysts and elections officials suggested that ARENA, which is widely expecced to lose the election Sunday, was seeking to lay the basis for an eventual charge of fraud. The U.S. government is known to prefer a victory by Mr. Duarte, because it expects that Congress could refuse to approve aid to the Salvadoran government in its bat-tle against a leftist insurgency if Mr. d'Aubuisson were president. Democrats, in Debate, Find Common Ground

By Dan Balz

Washington Post Service three Democratic presidential candidates found common ground on a host of issues Wednesday night in a nationally televised debate, as the nomination race approached what may be its definitive week.

The debate offered few sharp clashes and only occasional disagreement.

The one heated exchange came as Senator Gary Hart and Walter F. Mondale challenged the Rev. Jesse L. Jackson to repudiate the Rev. Louis Farrakhan of the Nation of Islam for what has been bel broadcast said. "The nation will widely viewed as a threat on the life of a Washington Post reporter. Tve disassociated myself from

But aside from those tense moments, the debate did little to separate the candidates as they moved into a crucial week in which 637 delegates are at stake.

Senator Hart, who desperately needs a primary election victory to stay in the race after Mr. Mondale's strong victory in Tennessee on Tuesday, ducked confrontation.

He even backed away from a harsh attack he made on Mr. Mondale two days earlier, when he accused the former vice president of being part of an administration that brought "days of shame" to America over the Iranian hostage

Fighting in Beirut Fightiog in Beirut escalated Thursday as Nabih Berri, the Shiite

Moslem leader, again rejected serving in the newly formed govern-ment unless cabinet portfolios for southern Lebanon and for the reconstruction of Beirut's southern suburbs are created, The Associated Press reported from Beirut. Christian and Moslem militiamen battled along Beirut's Green Line that divides the capital into Moslem and Christian sectors, firing shells and rockets into residential neighborhoods during the afternoon rush hour. Police said 28 persons, including 14 schoolchil-dren, were wounded.

Mr. Berri, who refused to accept his appointment as minister of justice, water and electricity resources, returned to Beirut from Damascus Thursday. He said nothing about whether he would reconsider.

Mr. Berri went to Damascus Tuesday and held a series of meetings on the cabinet issue with First Vice President Abdel Halim Khaddam, Mr. al-Sharaa and his Lebanese Druze opposition ally, Walid Jumblat

Mr. Jumblat had been named minister of tourism, public works and transportation in the 10-man cabinet, which, if it is formed, would be composed of the country's most bitter Christian and Moslem antagonists.

Soviet Attack Reported in Afghanistan

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (Reuters) - Soviet airborne commandos have attacked the key northern supply route to Afghanistan's Panjshir Valley and probably blocked the pass leading into the rebel stronghold, reports reaching Pakistan said Thursday.

One report from a close aide to the Panjshir guerrilla commander.

Ahmad Shah Massoud, said the commandos had been flown into the Andarab Valley and were now fighting Moslem resistance forces there. Another report from the area said guerrillas could neither enter nor leave the Panishir Valley because of the fighting at Andarab.

The attack on the Andarab Valley, which apparently began after a Soviet bombing campaign against the Panishir two weeks ago, was reported a day after Western diplomats said Soviet forces appeared to have cut off a pass leading out of the Panishir and toward Pakistan. Although sketchy and late, the various reports indicated the Soviet forces were trying to cut off the Panishir from guerrilla reinforcements. lis captured by Syrian troops in northern Lebanon Tuesday were filtrated from Beirut to the Tripoli administrative border simply to spy and gather information for a

Spain Refuses Any Haste on EC Entry

MADRID (Reuters) - Spain would rather delay its Sept. 30 deadline for joining the European Community than make a hasty agreement on entry terms, the country's chief negotiator said Thursday.

"If anyone attempts to fight against time and force Spain to comply with a decelling he will make with our and force Spain to comply with a deadline, he will meet with our government's refusal to accept any condition," he said.

However, the vice president of the European Commission, Lorenzo Natali, told the session that, despite the failure of the community's leaders to settle their internal problems at the Brussels conference in March, there was a political will to maintain the deadline.

Colombia to Extradite Drug Dealers

BOGOTA (AP) — President Belisario Betancur has ordered 18 suspected drug traffickers extradited to the United States, thereby breaking tradition of government protection.

Mr. Betancur announced his decision, reversing a policy that he instituted a year ago, at Wednesday's funeral of Rodrigo Lara Bonilla, the justice minister assassinated Monday. Mr. Lara Bonilla had received death threats after launching a campaign against Colombia's cocaine and marijuana traffickers.

The U.S. government had asked for extradition of 18 Colombians last ear, but at the time Mr. Betancur vetoed Colombian Supreme Court decisions approving the extradition, saying that Colombians should not be tried in toreign comuries. On Wednesday, Mr. Betancur also ordered all suspected traffickers not sought by the United States to be tried by military courts, with no bail allowed, to prevent threats to judges from affecting the outcome of the trials.

However, as it became clear that the freeze lacked enough support to win, several senators backed away from the politically risky plan.

The one-year, across-the-board freeze would have hurt military spending increases supported by the Republicans as well as social programs backed by the Democrats. as the executive committee, determining the caucus's positions. Women pay $1,500 in annual dues, while the men pay $650.

• The caucus has a well-researched economic equity program that calls for enforcement of child support orders, an end to discrimination in pensions and tax help for single heads of households, and giving homemakers the right to make the same tax-deductible contributions to individual retirement accounts as anyone holding a job. None of the bills has won final congressional ap-proval, but several have a chance to pass this year. The women's cancus members tend to vote together for issues they adopt, such as the economic equity bills and the ERA. But the caucus rarely takes positions on partisan issues such as tax legislation or the budget, and has no stand on abortion. In these cases, women will vote along ideological or party lines.

Regis Debray Plans a Trip Into His Past

By John Vinocur New York Times Service

PARIS - Hide out with Che Guevara in Bolivia and people will persist in asking you questions about Latin America. Pose for photographs back then, hand on cartridge belt, and embassy functionaries will flinch when your name comes up on cocktail party invitation lists 20 years later.

The past continually reaches up and nips at Regis Debray. At 44 years of age, he has a hard time getting the notion through that he has been thinking about other things since he went to Latin America as a 1960s retread of the intellectual engage of the '30s and wound up in jail for trying to join what he called the revolution in the

These days, with Marxism behind him, but his pistolero's mustache still intact, Mr. Debray works at Elysee Palace as a special counselor to President François Mitter-rand. BUENOS AIRES - Vice Admiral Juan Carlos Lombardo, who was the theater commander in the war with Britain in 1982, has been arrested in connection with the 1976 arrest and death of a woman in Mar del Plata, the woman's lawyer reported Wednesday.

The lawyer, Armando Fertitta. said at news conference in Mar del Plata that Admiral Lombardo was arrested Tuesday night after testifying before a judge and had been charged with perjury and ordered held at the Mar del Plata Naval base, 240 miles (about 386 kilometers) south of bere.

The admiral was said to have committed perjury in testimony in the case of Rosa Ana Frigerio, who should uncouple from historical rewas arrested by naval security alities, and the rule that military forces at her parents' home in Mar del Plata. The mark of how much Mr. Debray wants to project the changes in his thinking - some would argue that the alterations are ones of egree - is in his new book called La Puissance et les Reves" ("Power and Dreams"), written with the president's approval. Mr. Debray's publishers have given things away a bit by printing "the defense of France" in big capital letters across the cover, because the book deals essentially with how he says the democratic left in the country must emerge from its internationalist dreams into a policy of defining and fighting for the nation. The greater message of the moment seems to be forget dreams and put your money on power. In his book, Mr. Debray goes after international arbitration, collective security and disarmament as procedures in which socialism has placed its faith. They did not really work. Mr. Debray cannot condemn ideal-ism, but he does write, "What you can call Realpolitik is simply the converse of this ineffective ideal-two men have some things in common: Like the situation Mr. Aron experienced for years, Mr. Debray is not very fashionable among French intellectuals; and like the conservative political scientist. Mr. Debray often talks more felicatousv than he writes.

The argument that Mr. Debray develops most interestingly in con-versation is that the individual will come under severe pressure as a result of what the French call the Third Industrial Revolution, the movement in the industrial West away from steel mills and toward electronics and communications.

Mr. Debray thinks the new modernity will be in tools and objects. but not in people's heads; as a result he believes there will be a new grasping for a sense of community. He wants to make it one where a certain kind of Frenchness as an international cultural link (the operative words are francitude and francite) will be reaffirmed.

That sounds like nationalism, he is told; oh, no, the explanation runs, nationalism is absolutist and aggressive, and it does not admit the national interests of others. The assertiveness Mr. Debray wants is described as defensive in character, and offers support to other nation-alities struggling for their sover-eignty. It is here, when it comes to the Third World, that Mr. Debray begins to sound familiar because be asks how dare the West try to impose its views of democracy on exploited and hungry peoples.

And there is more that has an old ring: American culture is offensive in character and threatens many collective identities. Although be works for Mr. Mitterrand, not one to soft-pedal the role of the Russians, they do not get a particularly rough ride in his counselor's view

Cardinal Shedding Reticence to Lead Religious Revival

By Bradley Graham Washington Post Service

PRAGUE - Czechoslovakia's Roman Catholic primate, Cardinal Frantisck Tomasek, has shed his reticence to challenge the Commuoist government here and has suppord forward to lead a religious revival and demand greater church rights from one of Eastern Enrope's most repressive governments.

The transformation of the prelate from a restrained clergyman to outspoken defender of religious freedom and the church he represents has stunned the Prague leadership and Western observers while winning increased popularity for the elderly cardinal among many Czechoslovaks.

In Eastern Europe, Czechoslovakia's Roman Catholies rank second in number to Polish Catholics and the central role that the Polish church has played in sheltering and providing moral inspiration to the political opposition in Poland has been closely observed in this neighboring country. But the Czechoslo-vak church lacks the privileged po-sition the Polish one enjoys, nor has it the close historical association that Catholicism in Poland maintains with nationalist aspirations.

The Prague archbishop, who will turn 85 at the end of June, has been granting interview after interview spelling out the church's positions to foreign journalists.

He has also been taking party propagandists to task. When the Communist weekly Tribuna published a stinging assault on Pope born John Paul II March 28, labeling champion of religious freedom in Cardinal Tomasek's bold actions coincide with the recent resumption of high-level talks, after a three-year break, between the Prague government and the Varican on a range of nettlesome issues. The negotiations have produced nothing yet and the cardinal's moves appear to be tactical measures to unsettle the government.

Some suspect the Vatican may have put Cardinal Tomasek up to the offensive, but the primate in-sists it is purely his initiative. "It's my own decision to speak out," he said in an interview. "It's necessary that points of view which are rather confused now be made clear. The negotiations are at a stage of expec-

Regarded as a kind and able man who operates under trying conditions, the cardinal has been criticized in the past by church activists for learning toward the government Czechoslovaks and diplomats here surmise that two developments may have helped fortify his resolve

It remains a challenging task for the Prague archbishop to ride the crest of this country's modest religious revival without leading be-lievers into a counterwave of repression or, on the other hand, slowing their momentum.

Diplomats caution against exaggerating the scope of the revival. No mass conversions are occurring. But church officials, opposition activists, even spokesmen for state-affiliated religious groups note an increase in religious activity, which has gathered force in recent months and is reflected in mounting church attendance, a rise in the number of theology students, the spread of underground religious publications and the expansion of a network of unofficial religious discussion groups and Masses held in private

"The youth is increasingly interessed in the church and church life," observed Cardinal Tomasek when queried about the revival.
"And where the youth is, that is our hope for the future."

Behind this movement is the convergence of two major trends, according to several dissident Catholic philosophers. One is a feeling among people of a lack of progress on the secular level, a sense of chaos and decay and of sense of chaos and decay and of ment is insisting on screening the their opinion as cogently as they alienation from the party and the nominees and does not approve of have now done, they merit an state. Both Parties Are Uneasy

As the Democratic candidates debate the degrees of their passion — which candidate most adores the nuclear freeze, which most abominates grain embargoes — the nature of the fall campaign is being forecast quietly in a collection of statistics. The continued growth of the economy, shown most recently by figures indicating 9 percent growth in first-quarter GNP, is a poliocal plus for President Reagan. Mr. Reagan can argue that his policies are producing the broad, sustained, inflation-free prosperity that every incumbent president would like in have in years divisible by four. In contrast, the latest poli results on Central America and other places of U.S. overseas engagement suggest that foreign policy issues will work for the Democrats.

Republicans like to think that the U.S. public is waking up to the danger of communism on the nation's doorstep. But the polls show, as they have for two years, that people fear that the president's policy may lead to a major military involvement. That may not be their final, considered view. But as matters now stand many voters have concluded that Mr. Reagan has not made the world any safer and that U.S. troops should be withdrawn from Central America altogether. Democratic candidates Hart, Jackson and, in a limited way, Mondale share these views.

So the prospect is for the Republicans to emphasize economic issues and the Democrats to emphasize foreign policy. This leaves strategists of both parties uneasy, for historically it has worked the opposite way. Democrats have thrived since the New Deal on economic is-sues. And foreign policy issues have favored the Republicans, from the days when Dwight Eisenhower promised to go to Korea to the years of Nixon-Kissinger detente.

That leaves the politicians torn between their gut instinct to stress subjects that worked before and the lines on the graphs that tell them not to. So they are on the lookout for evidence that these unfamiliar issues will not work for them and that their old, familiar refrains will. The Democrats, convinced of the unwisdom of Reaganomics, are waiting for a collapse of economic confidence that would enable them to run on the "fairness" theme they used in 1982. They are poised to pounce on any adverse statistic—and there are some already, if you look at interest rates or (not a usual Democracic concern) the stock market. The Republicans, convinced of Americans' underlying patriotic fervor, are waiting for voters to rally around the flag on El Salvador as they did after Grenada.

This uneasiness is the greater because oct-ther party is in as strong a position as it would like. The Democrats do not see their old majority coalition coalescing. The Republicans see Mr. Reagan hovering at or just below the magic 50 percent mark in polls against Demo-crats. Each side is on an unfamiliar platform, fidgeting and looking for solid footing. Nei-ther has yet found the theme or assembled the coalition it needs to be reasonably confident that it is headed for a comfortable victory.

Two Strong Rulers at Issue: Marcos and Hassan

Caribbean Responsibility

The price riors in the Dominican Republic have been a protest against the conditions that the IMF imposes with its loans. The question arises once again whether the fMF has been ton harsh. In the case of the Dominican Republic, a poor country is now subjected in a public, a poor country is now subjected in a further drop in its standard of living.

The enormous rise in oil prices five years ago increased costs for all oil-importing countries, and the subsequent worldwide recession reduced their opportunities to export. A lot of countries, including the Dominican Republic, borrowed to stave off the impact of this drop in income. Executally, their ability to borrow. in income. Eventually, their ability to borrow exhausted, they have come to the IMF as the lender of last resort. The 1MF has a responsibility to prevent borrowers from using its loans merely to postpone the day of reckoning fur-ther, and that is why it imposes cooditions. The Dominican Republic had spent a lot of borrowed money holding its exchange rate too high and keeping down the prices that Domin-icans paid for imported goods. Now, at the insistence of the IMF, the government has let the currency sink toward a level that trade can support. That will help sell Dominican goods abroad, but it makes imports much more expensive. Since some of those imports are food-stuffs, there has been rioting.

curement of American military technology.

Adjustment is unavoidable. If the IMF were not there to help, the adjustment would take the form of a collapse of the currency and an abrupt end to all imports — threatening not merely austerity but actual starvation. But if the IMF is doing a necessary job, it is always important to ask whether the impact on the country's poorest citizens is not disproportionate. The IMF relies on the methods of macroeconomics and generally leaves the questions of distribution aside. That is the IMF's dilem-ma: as a technical financial agency, it cannot get into the internal politics of a country. But neither can it stay out of internal politics.

The greatest burden to political life in the small democracies of the Caribbean is their proximity to the United States. People on those islands often have relatives in the United States. They watch U.S. television. They know something about U.S. standards of living and the social benefits and protections routinely extended in a rich country. Caribbean govern-ments become trapped between the U.S. example and their own fragile economies. For all these reasons, the United States has larger responsibilities to aid the Dominican Republic than it has acknowledged in this time of eco-nomic decline in the Caribbean.

'Anything Can Happen' in This Filipino Ferment

MANILA — A Wild West, free-wheeling atmosphere charac-terizes Manila today, coupled with an underlying ruthlessness that makes the future frightening and unpredictable. Almost anything could happen.

The May 14 elections are the immediate focal point for politics. President Ferdinand Marcos appears to have made a number of concessions, existing much of the concessions. enticing much of the opposition to participate while a small but signifi-cant minority is urging a boycott. The stakes are very high.

The Reagan administration hopes the elections will be a turning point in restoring Mr. Marcos's credibility and pulling the country out of the tailspin it has been in since the brotal murder last August of opposition leader Benigno Aquino. But if the balloting is a failure marred by fraud, violence and popular rejection, the Philippines could continue down a road to political and economic crisis.

President Marcos, ill as be may be, is still a politician's politician. His gestures toward meeting opposition complaints include increasing the number of electoral districts from 13 regions to 46 provinces, making it far less expensive to campaign; changing the election code; marking voters' hands with indelible ink to prevent them from casting more than one ballot All this has succeeded in dividing his critics, making it more likely that his New Society Movement the Kilusan Bagong Lipunan, or KBL - will win all but 20 to 30 of the 183 seats in the national assembly. At the same time, Mr. Marcos continues to stack the deck in classic Filipino-style politics. For instance, when the campaign opened, his party spent some $3 million to "reat a crowd" of more than 300,000. A leaked internal memo from the Philippines central bank instructed emloyees to attend the rally, advising them that they would receive 30 pesos

(about $2) and a T-shirt as a reward. Similarly, during the week of registraion there were reports of thou-sands of "flying voters," who, for a small fee, register perhaps 20 or 30 times under diverse names in different districts. According to Jose Concepcion, a prominent businessman and chairman of the watchdog National Movement for Free Elections (NAMFREL), the number of voters registered in 51 of 61 cities exceeded the estimate of those eligible.

Then there is the violence. In the same week Rosita Villafuertes, vice mayor of a southern Luzon town, was murdered and three student activists were abducted during a demonstra-tion in front of the U.S. Embassy. Mrs. Villafuertes was running for office for the largest opposition coali-tion, UNIDO. She had persuaded 43 of 46 precinct captains of the ruling

KBL to resign and support it. Nonetheless, U.S. officials in Manila are probably right in saying that this is shaping up as one of the cleanest elections in recent years. With Mr. Marcos's health in question, a foreign debt of over $25 billion, a tattered economy and a growing leftist guer-rilla insurgency throughout the coun-try, the hope of U.S. diplomats and moderate opposition forces is that the elections will be the beginning of a democratic framework that can faBy Barry Rubin and Robert A. Manning cilitate a relatively smooth transition to the post-Marcos era.

Still, as one old Asian hand in Manila puts it, "Anything can happen—a coup, chaos, a leftist victory—and that, my friend is the very definition of instability."

Mr. Marcos appears buoyant for the moment, but the feeling is that the end of an era is argumaching.

the end of an era is approaching. Within his camp, his wife Imelda, the generals (Fabian Ver and Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile) and the cronies - especially Eduardo Cujaunco, who controls the cocount monopoly and recently became chair-man of San Mignel breweries —have all begun maneuvering for position in

With 600,000 people entering the job market each year and the population of 50 million expected to double by the end of the century, the demographics alone spell looming disaster.

From the rock music and T-shirts to the American-style education system and ubiquitous fast food stands, U.S. influence and close ties are obvious. But America has become a target of the anger of the opposition. At stake are the two largest over-seas U.S. bases, Clark Air Force Base

A Moroccan Time Bomb

ts monarchical rule, its falling standard of living and its rising expectations, is sometimes described as "a country waiting for an explosion that never comes. With a coastline that borders both the Atlantic and the Mediterranean, its strategic importance to the Weston world is obvious, and its stability essential. But despite the charm of this royal realm, so understandably dear to the hearts of tourists, that stability cannot be taken for granted. An explosion did occur in January.

About a hundred people were killed in riots over rumored price increases in two necessities of life: bread and education. The riots were suppressed. King Hassan II promised that there would be no further rise in food prices this year, they had already jumped by about 70 percent last year.

Also, the king exempted farmers from paying taxes. The poorest farmers, hard-hit by drought, were not paying taxes anyway. Virtually the only ones to benefit from this largess will be the large landsquares. will be the large landowners.
The king blamed the riots on Communists, Khomeinists and Zionists. What the crowds of youthful unemployed were really denouncing — as in Tunisia a few days earlier — were their dismal living conditions and their disappointing prospects. As in Tunisia, 60 percent of Morocco's population is under 25, and the population is rapidly growing.

Morocco is suffering from the twin effects of several years of extreme drought and severe industrial depression. The price of its principal export, phosphate (70 percent of the world's output) has plummeted. Agricultural production has dropped. Unemployment is at 20 percent; underemployment is incomparably higher. Despite a huge education program, almost half the children in some areas do not attend school. The illiteracy rate exceeds 75 percent.

With a $12-billion foreign debt,

NEW YORK - Morocco, with which is equal to 85 percent of its gross national product much more than that of the world's champioo debtors, Argentina and Brazil), Morocco is forced into some drastic belt-tightening. This includes a 25-percent cut in social services, which will mainly affect the nearly half of the nation's 21 million people already below the poverty line.

King Hassan comes closer to being an absolute ruler than any of his royal counterparts west of Suez. He has palaces all over the country, plus a million-dollar home recently acquired in Brouxville, New York. He controls the government, the legislature, the main political parties, the press. He has the unswerving devotion of the military.

A descendant of the Prophet, he is a defender of the Sunni faith and of the faithful He has a legitimacy among the people that derives from his religious and dynastic back-ground. His family has been ruling Morocco for more than 300 years. These things count in the Moslem world, but whether they will count enough against the terrible strains Morocco is facing is anybody's guess. One major strain is the Sahara war. It is a popular but expensive one, costing an estimated million dollars a day, supposedly paid for by the Sandis. It is a war to assert King Hassan's claim to the former Spanish Sahara - with its rich deposits of phosphate and possibly oil - and to put down the independence movement of a few thousand desert tribesmen called the Polisario Front. The Iront's main backer now is Algeria, which wants a window to the Atlantic.

President Reagan would like to be King Hassan's closest friend in the West. He has concluded an agreement with the west of the second th ment to build a big Voice of America transmitter in Tangier at enormous cost. Yet be takes an equivocal position on recognizing Polisario. He has, however, furnished King Hassan with $100 million in military equip-deep-rooted goodwill toward the United States — even a pro-state-bood movement that boasts several million members. But, while Mr. Marcos and the handful of potentates who control the coconut, sugar, ba-nanz and other industries cling to power, life grows more difficult for millions of Filipines whose response will determine the country's future. territory down once and for all. When the war is over, demobilized soldiers can only add to the unem-ployment problem. Many of the nearly one million Moroccan workers in Western Europe are already being forced to return home (where the annnal per capita income is $850) to rejoin the ranks of the unemployed or perhaps to earn wages at the legal minimum of $50 per month. King Hassan apparently has little yet to lear from Islamic fundamentalist extremists inside Morocco. But Khomeini emissaries have been concontraint emissaries have been con-centrating on Moroccan workers in Europe, especially in Belgium and France, against the day when they return embittered to their native villages or to the slums of Casablanca, in the shadows of the palatial country estates and city mansions of the rich.

Wanted: Coherence In Policy

By Philip Geyelin

WASHINGTON - "If I bad to name our single most serious foreign policy problem — from my point of view — it would be the degree to which the United States is degree to which the United States is no longer capable of managing a co-herent foreign policy."

Speaking is Lawrence Eagleburger.
His precise point of view until his retirement this week was that of undersecretary for political affairs, the No. 3 job in the State Department and tradicionally the highest in the career diplomatic service. His viewpoint profits from 29 years of work, mostly at the center of the national mostly at the center of the national security apparatus and in close association with secretaries of state from Dean Acheson to Henry Kissinger. Alexander Haig and George Shultz. In a 90-minute interview, he dwelt at length on the societal and institutional forces that be thinks have transformed the working conditions of the policy-makers and are now seriously confounding the conduct of American forcing policy.

He was ambassador to Yugoslavia in the Carter years and watched from in the Carter years and watched from a distance the American public reaction to the hostage-taking in Tehran. He came back in 1981 to join the Reagan administration as assistant secretary of state for European affairs, thinking that "maybe we were getting Vietnam out of our system." Three years later, he says: "I have to tell you I don't think we have.

He believes that the so-called Vict-nam syndrome "still weighs very heavily on the minds of a lot of peo-ple." He sees a sense on the part of ple." He sees a sense on the part of the public and Congress that involve-ment overseas, particularly if there is a prospect of using military force, "is in almost every case a swamp and therefore we shouldn't get into it."

U.S. diplomatic purposes would be better served, he argues, "if our ad-versaries thought we were more likely to be forceful in our actions."

Memories of Vietnam are also a factor in the legislative restraints enacted in reaction to that war: the War Powers Act, the Clark amendment forbidding covert aid in Angola, the human rights conditions attached to military aid, the souring of congressional oversight arrangements with the CIA. Mr. Eagleburger is less con-cerned with the particular restraints than with the general congressional suspicion of a strong executive.

"There has been a major change in the executive-legislative relation-ship," he says, "which means that the executive is forced to spend a great deal more time negotiating with other Americans before it can even deal with the problem abroad."

Mr. Eagleburger has no illusions about the "haleyon days of bipartisanship" after World War II when a sense of shared wartime purpose produced a foreign policy establishment that cut across party lines and accept ed at least some assumptions about the proper U.S. role in the world.

That establishment, having led the United States into Vietnam, was "largely discredited." he says. "What we have oot had since Vietnam is a foreign policy elite with a common view of what foreign policy ought to be, operating from common assump-Cons and a common base." One consequence is a weakening of authority in the executive branch and a profusion of internal debating. Inevitably, the internal conflict leaks out, and incoherently.

In this Mr. Eagleburger sees anothcr Vietnam legacy — a generational change. "I see it in the young officers who are far more prepared to chal-lenge authority than I was when I came in," be says. He recalls that many in his generation came out of the Depression and World War II yearning for "stability, certainty and economic well-being" and less in-clined than today's generation to make harsh judgments about the way the United States discharges its worldwide responsibilities."

He does not think that this disincli-nation to accept established stan-dards is all bad — in fact I think basically it's good." But the conduct of foreign affairs "requires some dis-cretion." and a spirit of rebellion makes it much more difficult to manage an effective policy."

Help may be on the way. Mr. Eagleburger sees a reaction to the fer-ment of the 1960s and '70s, signs that the Foreign Service is "going in be getting more disciplined, perhaps less imaginative junior officers."

His years as a career diplomat, many of them spent abroad, have persuaded him that America's "is the only truly revolutionary society" in the world. "You had better never decide that you have got it figured out." be says, "because it won't last."

A Lebanese Identity Regarding "In Lebanon, the Gun Hos Won" (Other Opinion, April 18):

Lebanon's identity is a permanent reality rooted in ancient history. The Lebanon of Ottoman times can be defined as the whole territory from the crest of Anti-Lebanon to the sea - a territory not much different from present day. Within those limits, an evolving form of political au-thority has continued without interruption since the early 17th century. Lebanon has never been part of Syria, but was linked with that country for administrative purposes by the Ottomans and the colonialist powers. Once given the choice, the Lebanese have repeatedly chosen independence. If a referendum were held now, at least 95 percent of the people would vote for a united Lebanon and the constitutional framework we have enjoyed for 40 years. GENERAL AHMED EL-HAJJ, Ambassador of Lebanon. London.

Agricultural Research Regarding "Is It Time to Move From Research to Solving Third World Problems in the Field?" (in the Special Report on World Agriculture, April 21) by Peter Oakley: The argument- that "agricultural research has had its time" contains a major contradiction and neglects several important aspects relevant to the need for agricultural research. If, as Mr. Oakley states, much of agricultural research is irrelevant to the vast majority of farmers (at least in the Third World), how can one argue that existing technologies, products of that research, should be more widely diffused? The technology will be as irrelevant as the research. What may be needed is a change in research methodology, specifically, starting the research process "in the field" in order to define real needs for new and more appropriate technology. This is now being done, for example by the Asian Rice Farming from the International Rice Research Institute and 10 countries in Asia. The article's argument also illustrates a major problem with regard to both absolute and relative financial allocations to agricultural research. The availability of food for human consumption involves far more than the input-output relationship of farm production. Research on the "postproduction" components of national and regional food systems is equally important. Reductions in the quantitative and qualitative losses that occur in developing countries after the food is harvested could represent savings and increased incomes of hundreds of millions of dollars annually, research anywhere in the world. Mr. Oakley's argument is far too simple and narrow. Recognizing past difficulties or even mistakes is not a Systems Network involving scientists reason to stop agricultural research.

as well as improve per capita con sumption of good quality food. Yet, I

Third World regional research insti-tute on agricultural post-production

Much of what has been done has been done well and has provided much benefit. The questions are now: Should research methodology and organization change in order to identify real oeeds and develop appropriate technology, and is the total research effort balanced? We can learn from what we have done. There is still much to do - far more than has already been undertaken. CHRISTOPHER MACCORMAC.

A Boorish Welcome

Regarding "Europe's Diverse Air-ports" (Weekend, April 13):

Paul Lewis dismisses the vexatious nature of U.S. immigration too easily. In my 30 years of frequent travel. the only gramitously unpleasant incident I can remember occurred at Boston's airport. A 17-year-old school-boy, I was tired after the long flight from London and had cleared immigration and was leaving the arrivals hall when I was whisked from among fellow passengers by two men and leaving fellow passengers by two men and led to a curtained-off area. Without identifying themselves they searched me and questioned me for 10 minutes. Finally, as my American passport was perfectly in order, they released me without explanation or apology.

There is probably cause to suspect certain people of trying to enter America illegally, but the authorities might do better at catching them if they employed adequately trained screening personnel instead of boors.

Ansel Adams: A Pure Eye Beforehand

by Gene Thornton

EW YORK - The brilliant clarity of Ansel Adams's photographs especially the Western landscapes in black and white for which he is best known and most loved -- is no accident. It is partly the result of a deep love of nature and a good eye, plus the natural dryness and clarity of the Western air.

But it is also the result of a technical procedure that Adams, the master photographer who died April 22 at the age of 82, developed, refined and codified in a series of instruction books and technical manuals. These began in 1935 with the publication of "Making a Photograph." and continued for the rest of his life. The most recent how-to book, "Examples, the Making of 40 Photographs," was published in 1983 by the New York Graphic Society.

At the heart of this ocedure is the practic of previsualization. This means planning the photograph before making the exposure, carefully studying the image in the camera's view-finder or on the ground-glass screen and making sure that every element of the picture — lighting, composition, focus and pose — is the way the photographer wants it before making the exposure.

The result should be a picture that can be printed straight from the negative without any need for retouching or other manipulation of negative or print.

This type of "straight" or "pure" photography is the norm today among serious amateurs and art photographers, so much so that it may seem odd to include it among the characteristies of Adams's technique. But it was not the norm when Adams was starting out as a photographer in the 1920s.

In those days it was customary for artistically ambitious "Pictorialist" photographers to retouch the photographic image extensively to make it look more like a painting, a drawing or a print. The unassisted camera was not believed to give its operator enough control over the picture to dignify the results with the name

Adams did not invent the idea of straight or pure photography. An early and eloquent spokesman was the critic Sadakichi Hartmann, in his review of the 1904 Photo-Secession exhibition at the Carnegie Institute in Pittsburgh. and early practitioners included Paul Strand, Alfred Steiglitz and Edward Weston. After a meeting with Strand in 1930, Adams abandoned his earlier, more Pictorial approach in favor of straight photography and became its most eloquent spokesman and exponent.

The had his work cut out for him. Although the straight photographers rejected the Pictorialist practice of darkroom manipulation, they did not reject the Pictorialist claim that photography was art. On the contrary, they claimed that "pure" photography, the type they practiced, was more artistic than the type practiced by the Pictorialists.

However, straight photographers had less control over their final results than Pictorialists, since they had restricted themselves to purely photographic means, and this left them open to Pictorialist charges of not being real

It was in part to meet this objection that Ansel Adams developed the celebrated Zone System of photography, a method that he and such successors as Minor White and Fred Picker have written about and taught in workshops all over the United States and abroad. The aim of the Zone System is to give the photographer the maximum control over his picture-making consistent with a purely photographic tech-

Adams began by dividing the darks and tights of the photographic print into 10 distinct shades or zones, ranging from pure black

(Zone 0) to pure white (Zone IX). Between are eight graduated shades of gray — Zone V, the middle tone, being the one that seems closest to halfway between dark and light, and Zone VI being the tone of Caucasian skin under good

By learning to see his subject in this scale of grays, the photographer can "previsualize" not only the subject matter and composition of his picture but also how it will translate into the darks and lights of a photographic print.

Adams used a photoelectric exposure meter to measure the brightness of the parts of a scene he was photographing, Beaumont New-hall explained in his classic "History of Photography." These calibrations were then correlated with exposure and development to enable the photographer to achieve in the final print the entire gamut of values he previsualized. "The control is comparable to that which a musician has over his instrument," Newhali

ARIS — Two years ago the French government sponsored an international competition for new office designs for its public-sector employees and the Musee des Arts Decoratifs was asked to display the winning prototypes. From this unpromising start has come one of the best, and certainly the most surprising, museum shows this season. The prototypes themselves are of no great interest; what Jean François Grunfeld, who mounted the show, "L'Empire du Bureau" (until May 14), has done is to present an imaginative and suggestive display of desks from the late 19th century to tomorrow.

Playing with the double meaning of the word hursan in French

Playing with the double meaning of the word bureau in French (desk and office space), Grunfeld has probed deftly into the word's connotations and into the word derived from it, bureaucracy — a French word that did not enter the English language until 1848. The show is backed by a sound track ranging from jangling bells to teadance music and there are entertaining side views such as "The Desk in Painting" (especially in the work of Edward Hopper) and "The Desk in Film," which ranges from the crowded newsrooms of "The Front Page" to the monomaniacal desks of dictators and tycoons.

There are desks by famous designers from Charles Rennie Mackintosh, Josef Hoffmann, Henri Jansen and Robert Mallet-Stevens to George Nelson and Florence Knoll. There is the beautiful and sickish art nouveau desk by Henry Van de Velde, and Frank Lloyd Wright's first try (in 1904) at a metal desk with swivel chair. There is no American rolltop, no stand-up desk, no partners' desk, but the show does not aim at being complete. The intention is simply to provoke reflection on a simple, everyday object and, in a most engaging way, it does.

At the entrance is a display case of 19th-century pencil sharpeners, staplers, typewriter ribbon boxes — neat, boastful rows of machineage progress (one pencil sharpener has more sprockets than a Citroen 2CV engine and is about as big). This armory of accessories leads to the first desk, from a Paris bank of 1882: heavy, pompous, impassive, it speaks of foreclosures and rejected pleas and it makes a visitor and a desk is often bearing and it makes a visitor and the progressive of the pencil pen quail. A desk is often a barrier and almost always a power symbol.

The 19th century was more outspoken than the 20th in its use of power symbols: a 1902 article explains that a government minister's chair must be very large, ornately carved, leather-covered, while his assistant would have a smaller armchair and a backrest in wood rather than leather. The sous-chef de bureou has no leather at all, while the lowest-ranking executive has an armless, uncarved, unu-pholstered straight chair.

Anyone who has had any truck with the French administration knows it is a bottomless pit of paper dossiers that would make Dickens's case of Jarndyce and Jarndyce look as if it had been inscribed on floppy disks. The fonctionnaire views the ordinary person as a potential delinquent who must be carefully watched.

"The Frenchman, it is true, is nominally a citizen," the English historian Richard Cobb has noted, "but his real status is better explained in officialese: he is an administre. He must be constantly protected against his own wickedness. It is assumed, for instance, that in the absence of a system by which his true identity can be established, he will assume a false one."

Each year 77.5 million francs, or nearly $10 million, is spent on office furniture for French functionaries. It is unlikely that the gleaming prototypes of the present show will change their habits or attitudes although the furniture may exacerbate civil servants' rotten tempers since it tends to follow the recent trend of abolishing privacy

Open-plan offices are disturbing because the desk is a most intimate piece of furniture, more intimate perhaps than a bed since it is designed to combine public probity and private vice (secret drawers were long a standard feature of desks). In fact, the parallel between desk and bed can be so closely drawn that Jean François Grunfeld now regrets that he didn't have a section called "The Desk and Love.

In France, a desk is not only masculine in gender, it is masculine in concept. "A man writes at a bureau, a woman at a secretaire," Grunfeld says. In the 1930s a bureau de dames appeared, hut be was unable to put one in the show. In recent years it has become fashionable to have a desk as shining and clear as a skating rink (it shows the executive does not trouble with detail) or even an office without a desk at all, which is intended to show that the executive is unconcerned with everyday banalities. An older executive, according to the catalog, is unlikely to have on his desk a photograph of his wife, who is probably past her prime. Executives who put family photographs in a position where they can be seen by the visitor but not by the supposedly fond busband or father are using their nearest and dearest to give the visitor a feeling of stability and calm.

The exhibition does not confine itself to the executive suite: There is a chilling example of a typing pool and a picture of the big workroom in Frank Lloyd Wright's Johnson's Wax Building (1939), of which Wright said, "This building is designed to give work the same enthusiasm as the cathedral brings to religion."

Chairs by Wright and other distinguished designers are on view and the catalog contains learned references to ergonomic research. The importance of chairs should not be underestimated: Had Rosemary Woods's employer, Richard Nixon, given her a better work chair, she would not have let 18 minutes of precious tape vanish into thin air while grabbing for the telephone.

The tape recorder, incidentally, was invented in 1898 by Valdemar Poulsen, a Dane; in England in 1812, Charles Babbage invented a machine with a memory, the precursor of the modern computer. The philosopher Pascal invented a machine that could add and subtract m 1642 and 30 years later the philosopher Leibniz came up with one that would multiply and divide.

The show also includes a selection of photographs of writers at their desks. Louis-Ferdinand Celine's desk looks like the bottom of a bird cage, Harold Pinter's is spare and remote, Kingsley Amis's is flanked by empty bottles of booze. Kafka's desk is not shown, but clearly he cared about it: "For me," he wrote in a letter, "the desk is a human being, a living creature that looks at me wherever I am with candid eyes, a being to which I am tied in a mysterious fashion."

The right desk gives its user the perfect proportion of security and privacy. Even Sinclair Lewis's Babbitt got from his desk a feeling of reckless self-assurance: "His office was his pirate ship...his car his perilous excursion ashore."

IENNA — At the end of Edna O'Brien's first novel, "The Country Girls" (1960), her heroine was jilted in Duhlin by a married man who had promised to take her to Vienna. Almost a quarter of a century later, O'Brien takes a bite of boiled beef called Tafelspix: ("Sacher's smelled like Irish stew when we came in," she notes, "but this is much too good") and confesses that this visit to Vienna is anything but belated fulfillment of a thwarted dream.

"It's a pleasant rumor, but 'Country Girls' was ton long ago. People constantly assume my books are autobiographical and, of course, they do have a very strong element in that I grew up in this time and that town and country and I attended a convent school, though, imlike [her heroines] I never had the good luck to be expelled.

"The autobiographical aspect of one's work is much less than is thought, for you have not only to elaborate and exaggerate, but use your imagination. If it were only antobiography, it would be just plain dull."

O'Brien could never be accused of plainness or dullness, neither in person — at age 47, she is a smashing redhead with gray-green eyes that sometimes flash blue or brown — nor in print. "Edna O'Brien has been hailed by critics as a champion of 'the condition of women. especially their sexual repression," her listing in Contemporary Authors begins, quoting a man; it later cites a woman's tribute to "field

ONDON — London's most recent architectural competition had everything: the drama, the pathos, the inflatable parrot. Well, there wasn't all that much drama or pathos, but there were 12 inflatable parrots. And, unlike other recent competitions — such as the one to choose the design for the extension to the National Gallery — that have been dogged by controversy, public feuds and charges of manipulation, this one was all sweetness and light, organized just for the fun of it by the Building Center, a clearing house for building products. The judges didn't even claim to be impartial: "Bribing of judges is allowed," one announced at the start.

Twelve teams from London's "most exciting firms" — architectural and construction — each clutching an inflatable parrot provided by the organizers, met at 6 o'clock on a Wednesday evening in the basement of the Building Center. Actually, 11 teams met at 6 o'clock; the 12th was an hour late.

The rules were simple: Each 4-person team had 90 minutes to build anything involving an inflatable parrot, using Lego blocks. At the end of this London round leading to the national finals, a winner would be chosen and applicated, and then everyone would break up their creations and go home.

Shortly after 6, the organizers turned the contents of three buge drums marked "Lego Competition Material URGENT" onto the floor and the scramble was on. Each team assigned one person to collect the blocks they would need, a personality test that rivals the

For some, time was the most important thing. They shoveled blocks frantically into a large plastic bag and ran back to their team to start building. Others took 20 minutes to fill their bags, searching painstakingly for the right pieces in the right colors (red, blue, while, gray and green to choose from). Some had heartache in store. "The color scheme was shot quite quickly," said one shaken competitor. "We thought we'd get enough to do certain elements in certain colors, but there's so much rubbish in bere it's hopeless."

The rejected pieces, which included such exotica as trees, wheels, windows, robots, tractor tires, steering wheels and a lone patio umbrella, showed the competitors, by and large, to be purists.

"We've made big efforts to make this as much like real life as possible," one of the organizers said. "The rules allow the judges to change the brief at any time during construction. It's just like having a fractious client — is there any other kind?" Indeed, half an hour before the end, with most of the constructions nearly complete, the judges annonced that they wanted all entries to have a window. Five minutes before deadline, they changed their minds and banned all

The setting for the competiton was a showroom for bathroom and kitchen fixtures. The Edward Cullivan team built a parrot mausoleum between the "The World's First Sandwich-Foam Cistern" and a display of kitchen fancets including the Superspa, the Midas, the Fairline, the Temperfix, the Alterna and the Mononova. Nearby, an exhibit by the government's Building Research Establishment warned: "The structural condition of prefabricated reinforced concrete houses built after the First World War and between 1945 and 1960 has recently given cause for concern."

As the competitors feverishly worked on their creations, the judges drank and wandered around, appearing dissatisfied with the contestants' moral standards. "They're too high," a judge said.

There was one team last year that was magnificent. They set up ropes and bollards around their table; they had PR girls walking around saying, 'This is a brilliant scheme,' and they were handing out bottles to the judges. It was great. Just like a real construction company. They didn't win, though. I guess that's why they didn't come back." What were the judges looking for? someone asked Frank Newby, who was one. "After an hour and a half of red wine, I'm not sure," he said.

The head judge, Piers Gough, interviewed the competitors as they worked. Gough is a young, highly regarded proponent of post-modernism who, if his architectural career doesn't work out, has a bright future as a television game show host.

"Height or width, what would you say is going to win the competition here this evening, sir?"

"Mass."

"The gentleman thinks that mass will decide it." A bittle later: "Mention of the client has brought laughter at the Hulme Chadwick table." And to the team that arrived late, "Thank God less is more."

In a serious moment, Gongh offered his thoughts on the progress of the competition. "The ones with the plans won't win. They're too uptight, very British. There's no whimsy. Everything is very vertical and horizontal. Of course, it's difficult not to be with Lego."

and horizonal. Of course, it's difficult not to be with Lego."

At the Lanchester and Lodge table, where Bruce, Bob, Wally and Winston wore hardhats, green rubber boots and green overalls with their names in gold, one judge asked another, "How would you describe that?" "A typical Lego construction." was the reply. Luckiy no one from Legoland was there to hear the product being abused. Back in the laboratories, white-coated experts have discovered more than 1,000 ways to connect three eight-stud bricks.

than 1,000 ways to connect three eight-stud bricks.

When it came to the final decision, the judges pulled no punches. "Completely tasteless" and "Showing signs of parrot-noia" were two evaluations. Last year's winner, Rock Townsend — "the offending champion" in Gough's words — took third place with a parrot elevator that went up but not down. French Keir Construction finished second with an Olympic ice rink that "in keeping with recent practice at Montreal and elsewhere" was not finished in time.

First place went to the Hulme Chadwick team, whose design of three parrots (paryatids) supporting a pediment was inspired by the Parthenon and guided by a detailed plan. The judges praised their interesting use of a pre-stressed parrot."

The finals of the Building Center-Lego competition, scheduled May 16 at the Building Center, 113 Portland Street, Manchester, (tel: 236-9802), will be open to the public.

Margossian and other professional hunters argue that the real threat to Africa's wildlife is poaching, ant big-game hunters, whose activity

Stalking the True Bouillabaisse

ARSEILLE - If you just wait a bit, Marseille lives up to its reputations. The mistral will blow down the Rhone Valley, propelling mists and clouds cut to sea, and making perfectly clear why ophthalmologists and car doctors prosper here, and why blue sky and blue water do not make every French Mediterranean city into a Cannes or a Villefranche, all beach and parasols.

The papers will have several good crime stories, often beginning with the phrase, "as the attentive reader will have noted from our previous reports," and including three or four marvelously named suspects in the Provençal tradition — Prosper, Hippolyte and Hyacinthe to their parents and the police blotter, but Big Z, Nono and Pizza Face to the connoisseurs. Marseille does not confess to liking its criminals, but their world is a real one: A recent visitor on terribly mandane business at an official building was asked, totally offhand, as he entered the door. "Are you armed, sir?"

In a country whose capital is often obsessed with elegance and nuance, Marseille can come across as coarse but very good relief. Pretense could never stand up long in its winds. Most of the time, Marseille wouldn't consider tricking a visitor on anything meaner than a cah fare. But it is here, in the area of dissimulating, that locals issue friends their only serious warning about an essential element of the city's reputation: Watch out for the bouillabaisse.

T here are 100 places to go wrong. There are tens of restaurants around the Vieux Port, the little harbor at the city's heart, that are tourist traps — gargotes — where the "real Marsellie fish soup — echie Marsellier fischsuppe" can come out of a can packed in Salzgitter or Rotterdam. The situation was such that a couple of years ago a posse of 17 Marseille restaurant owners formed a Committee of Self-Defense to protect the real article from cut-rate

What bouillabaisse should be is a bouillon made from fish from the Mediterranean. Purists go on about whether 7 or 12 varieties are needed, or if the catch must come from near certain gray rocks just outside the city, but that sounds silly to the Marseillais, the kind of high-church food finickiness that they say is the opposite of the spirit of bouillabaisse. They feel the same way about theories that the fish must be hooked and not netted, supposedly because the firmest, best-eating fish stay close to the coast, where nets don't work. The truth is that some days, according to Jeanne Visciano, one of Marseille's real bouillabaisse specialists, you just settle for what's fresh and local. This usually monte born. Assembling the linest materials and most skilled artisans he could find, Charles made certain that the factory on the grounds of his Capodimonte palace produced work of the first quality. He was so pleased with the porcelain that when Ferdinand VI of Spain, his half-brother, died in 1759 and Charles was called to the Spanish throne, he decided not to leave the factory behind. The artists, the molds, even the ovens were sent to Spain. The development of the ceramic aris in that country took an interesting new turn with Buen Retiro ware, and Naples, it would seem, was left with nothing.

But it didn't quite work out that way. Charles's successor in Naples, his son Ferdinand, built another factory in 1771. The modeling of figurines, for which Capodimonte is now well-known, was begun. With the Napoleonic invasion, politics took priority over porcelain and the royal factory ceased production of Capodimonte in 1806. Then families in Naples started out at hinch with Yves Gaveriaux, a reporter at Le I Meridional, who says he's lived through some very strange brushes with bouillabaisse. He insisted you could eat on the Vieux Port if you chose La Samaritaine, 2 big brasscrie (43 Quai du Port, tel: 91.90.31.41), the kind of place where local businessmen have 2 coffee or a bite, close enough to city hall so that it serves as a reservoir of fresh gossip. Gaveriaux was right. The bouillabaisse was classic, the broth being served first, with croutons and routile, the creamy tomato-and-garlic-flavored sauce that you spoon in to suit your taste. The fish comes separately, and the ritual is to put pieces into the broth after having a go at the soup on its own.

The bouillabaisse seemed honest to me at 120 francs ($15) a person. And there were none of the up-market doodads - throwing in a piece of langouste, for example — that signify less authenticity and a higher bill.

For dinner, I joined Bill Ward, who's watched the city and the French Connection for several years as the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration's agent in Marseille. We went to Michel (63 Rue des Catalans, tel: 91.52.30.63), the city's classic bouillabaisse palace, which Michelin gives a star. It is a relaxed place, with shellacked lobsters and starfish on the walls and fresh fish laid out by Mrs. Visciano on an altarlike display counter that you run into as you come in. When Michel is full, it sends people across the street to Le Calypso (3 Rue des Catalans, tel: 91.52.64.00), which has quite the same menu, the same Michelin star and maybe a better view of the

The bill at Michel was about 400 francs for two with wine and dessert. One of the things that appeared to irritate the self-defense committee particularly was that some places have passed off bouilla-baisse as a 40- or 50-franc item. This is considered a physical impossibility, in any case, no self-respecting restaurant in town offers anything approaching the real thing for under 100 francs.

The place I missed that a cop told me was pure Marseille is Chez Etienne (43 Rue de Lorette, no telephone), specializing in tender little marinated squid. It is in the Panier district, a place of cobblestones and narrow dark streets.

"Take a taxi," the cop suggested, a local booster building up the neighborhood's rough reputation. "There's always been a lot of atmosphere. During the occupation, there was enough of it to hide a lot of Resistance people in Le Panier. The Germans didn't enjoy going in there much. Things have smoothed out a bit since."

able. At the school they teach theory." In fact, the state-run ceramics school on the grounds of the Capodimonte palace offers a five-year, in-depth course of study, including qualities of clay, traditional techniques and history. Tucci's son Mario attends the school. "But it is only in have the diploma," Tucci says with disdain. "We know how to make pieces from our experience here."

For many generations, his family has had the right to label its work with a distinctive emblem, a large "N" with a small crown on top. But some graduates of the state school may also use it, and their work does not always meet Tucci's standards. Others have adopted a style duhbed "new Capodimonte" that Tucci believes is simply inferior. He tells the story of one family with distaste For many years they worked in the traditional styles, but now have taken up the new trend, with much of the work done by outsiders, often with little or no training. The result is a mass-produced look that looks like a poor forgery to anyone who is familiar with Capedimonte

Tucci has faith that the public will never accept such frauds, as he sees them, and he tells a story that appears to back him up. For 20 years, he says, he worked in a porcelain factory not associated with his family. At first there were just a few workers, producing a high-quality product. Gradually, the business exanded, till at nne point it employed more than 300 people. "In the last years they left the traditional for modern work," he says. "And that was the end of the factory, it failed."

Tucci intends to make sure no such fate befalls his family's enterprise. He sells its work nnly to the stores he considers Naples's best He oversees almost all the work himself. " know how to paint, to sculp! — I have a broad competence in all the technical phases," he

Aside from the floral work that is the foundation of the Tucci output, he sculpts the porcelain figurines that are another Capodimonte classic. On glass shelves by his desk are patterns he has designed.

Only a few families carry on the work in the traditional way, and that worries Tucci. The thought of a decline in the quality of the Capodimonte work disturbs him more than anything else.

"I know another family," says a visitor, "hut the man died, his son has no interest in porcelain, and now their factory is closed." She mentions the name and Tucci frowns.

"That man is a fine artist," he says. "He is not dead." "But he is," insists the visitor. She describes the location of the factory and shop and Tucci nods. "Ah, that one," he says. "That was the cousin. He was no craftsman."

"But he made beautiful things," protests the Tucci shrugs. "He was too commercial. He had some qualified workers, but..." He shrugs again.

reports on the feminine condition at its most

Discussing now ber visit to Vicana for a reading, she says: "It was just a little piece of fate. My connection with Vienna was always tenuous. It was a place, it is a place, I had always wanted to come to—for two reasons." The first was the Middle European roots of Ernest Gebier, the writer from whom she was divorced in 1967 after 15 years of marriage and 2 sons. The other was that she was "seeking the ghost of Sigmund Freud on the streets of Vienna"—a ghost that her schedule of interviews and receptions would not permit her to Confined to the Hotel Sacher for march of her stay, she instead interpreted "a dream of serving that I had quite lately and found terribly funny. In it, I was doing many things: errands, cooking lighting fires, looking after people, opening champagne, opening wine, making banquets. I was also writing a play of my own and helping another author to rewrite his, so, to say the least, I was rather over-worked. And I wakened up uttering the following line: I am a born-again slave!" "And I roared with laughter, for in my character there is this conflict - there's a lot of conflict - between being the dutiful daughter and the rebellious daughter."

Here again, the revelation is literary instead of autobiographical Baba and Kate the "Girls" of her first three novels (after "The

in 1962 and "Girls in Their Married Bliss" in 1964), were neither O'Brien's schoolmates nor friends in Ireland, but her alter egos, she says. "There is a side of me," she explains, "that is robustious, wild and defiant" - the Baba who uses an obscene unage of priest and nun to engineer the girls' expulsion from the convent.
"And there is another side of me that is pious, masochistic and docile" - Kate, whose innocent posting of a "Do Not Enter. Lecture in Progress" sign on the wrong door, a lavatory's, Now O'Brien applies this to life: "Our character is our life. I think Freud has already said that character is fate or, as somebody else put it, 'Looks is fate.' Whether I'd have been really expelled or not would have made no difference to charting the pattern of my life.

It was inevitable that I would not marry an Irishman, as I was escaping so zealously. but it was also inevitable, I suppose, that my sense of exile would increase with the years: both in paipable distance from my native country, but also in the way I look at life and people. One of my very favorite authors is Rilke and he has said, in so many words, that solitude is very good preparation for eternity."

If loneliness and independence appear to be dominant themes of O'Brien's novels about men and women, she is not offended by Julia O'Faolian's criticism in The New York Times Book Review that her "range is narrow and obsessional. The larger world does not interest her. Her social settings are perfunctory. Her sex- and self-absorbed women are undisnurbed by the day-to-day. Nothing intervenes to prevent their passion reaching boiling point. However, theirs never boils over. There is no explosion. No climax. This slice of life is chopped off more or less neatly and a few sentences of melancholy Stoicism tie it up."

O'Brien responds: "I have written a great deal about men and women. . and certainly the outcome has never been extremely buoyant and happy. Now I don't think I'm alone or paranciae in thinking that or in writing about it, for we know it is so much the case." O'Brien is also a playwright and two of her plsys will be produced in the coming months. "Virginia," about Virginia Woolf, will open in New York next season with Kate Nelligan playing the role Maggie Smith originated in London, where O'Brien lives. ("One thing that saddens me about our modern world," O'Brien says, almost in an aside, "is that, while more books are bought than ever before, more secand-rate bonks are being published and bought than ever in history - books that leave not a footstep on the path of literature, but, if anything, a great daub. I think that, if Proust and Virginia Woolf were alive today and willing exactly as they write, their appreciation would not be as great as it was in their time, even when it wasn't much. If 'To the Light-house' were published now, it would be re-viewed with five other novels and at least one notice would refer to the oversensitive woman whose brain seems in slip over into insanity.") The other play, newly written, will be produced in London in the fall. Called "Family

Butchers," its principal character is "based on my own father, but much more exaggerated. for our art is also our therapy. There is a pity and understanding there now that, for example, wasn't there when she depicted Kate's drunken puritan "Dada" of the "Girls" books. O'Brien describes "my original deepest and buried themes" that recur throughout her work as "looking for the father and looking for God the Father." But she is content "if people think write just about men and women, so long as they read me. Then they'll find out." In Vienna, O'Brien ended her interviews and her reading on approximately the same wistful note: "When I left my village, I had some dabble - and still do - with earthly love. What I once wrote in a book: 'Inebriations of love/ Shadows of love/ Foretastes of love/ But never yet that one true love." Tn which she adds now, "I have suffered at the hands of men because I have chosen unwisely very often, which you might say is my mistake as much as theirs. But also, if you're a rather intense person and combine that with being a writer, it would be unrealistic to imagine that this yearning, this longing, could be satisfied or fulfilled by a man."

Yet the search for love goes on. "Yes, I think one is more capable of loving - and therefore being loved - the older one gets. It's like a ladder or a stairs. One has to go through those various escalations in order to arrive at the deepest and most perfect love."

Harry Truman Lived Here

by Mark Peterson

NDEPENDENCE, Missouri — The familiar beige raincoat and tan felt hat with the narrow band and upturned brim — "Made expressly for the Honorable Harry S Truman" — have hung by the back door since the president last took them

"It's as if he just came back from a walk through the neighborhood," says Norm Reigle, a National Park Service superintendent. He is in charge of preparing the Truman home for the public tours scheduled to begin a few days after the 100th anniversary of the former president's birth oo May 8.

In the apple-green kitchen, painted decades ago by Harry and Bess Truman's only child, Margaret Truman Daniel, a well-worn ironing board leans in the oorner.

"This is more like grandma and grandpa's house." Reigle says. "If you took down the pictures of the president and Mrs. Truman, and you didn't know what Margaret looked like, you wouldn't know whose house you were in. It's very unassuming.

The white gingerbread-trimmed Victorian is at 219 North Delaware Street at the corner of what was Van Horn Road before it was renamed Truman Road. The house is a monument to the unaffected people who called it home from the time they were married in 1919 to the time they died. Few are the signs that the 33d president of the United States lived here. that this was the summer White House from

"It appears that at this bouse, politics stopped at the front door." Reigle says.

The free, 15-minute public tour, starting May 12, will begin at the front gate of the black fence around the vard. The fence was erected in 1947. Reductant at first to have it installed, Truman eventually beeded former President Herbert Hoover's warning that "if you don't, they [souvenir bunters] will tear the place

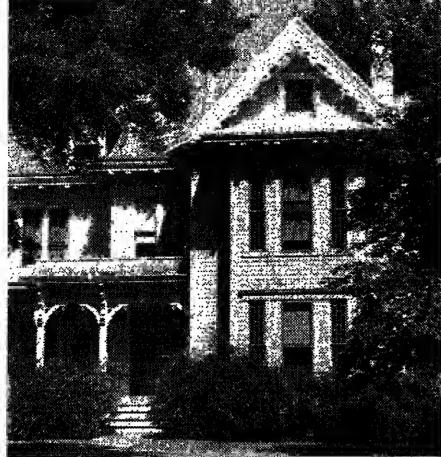

Inside on the right is the living room and an adjoining bedroom. This is where the Trumans spent most of their time in the final years. The president died in 1972, the day after Christmas. Mrs. Truman died a decade later.

Across the hall, in the music room, sits a baby-grand piano topped with photographs, including one of Lyndon B. Johnson. The two men were friends and fellow Democrats, and Johnson used to come to Independence for political advice.

This piano nearly crashed through the floor of the White House in the summer of 1948, prompting Truman to tell his sister: "The White House is about to fall in. Margaret's sitting room floor broke in two but didn't fall through the family dining room ceiling. Now my bathroom is about to fall into the red parlor. They won't let me sleep in my bedroom. I'm using Old Abe's bed and it is very comfort-

An accomplished planist. Truman played whenever he could. He said that while waiting in Kansas City's Muchlebach Hotel for 1944 election returns, he sat down at the keyboard and played "a little Mozart and maybe some Chopin, I always played Chopin every chance I

Next on the tour is the dining room. White House china is in the cabinet. A silver epergue, a wedding gift to Mrs. Truman's mother and father, stands in the center of the table. Margaret's splintery wooden highchair sits against the north wall.

Then comes perhaps the president's favorite place in the house — the study, lined floor-toceiling on three walls with books and records. There, sitting in his stuffed chair in the bay window with Bess seated to his left flipping through the latest murder mystery, be would read history or biography, Mark Twain or Tennyson,

"I could never find time enough to read all the things I wanted to," Truman said in his book, "Mr, Citizen."

On top of the phonograph are baseballs the president threw out at opening games of the Washington Senators and Kansas City Athletics in the 1950s. In the corner are the canes he used on his "120-paces-a-minute morning walks" down the wide, tree-lined streets of Independence. A Burlington Northern Railroad calender has not been changed since October 1982, when Mrs. Truman died.

Back through the kitchen - the two small paintings on ceramic above the table are originals by Grandma Moses -- and onto the screened-in porch, where the visit ends. It was under the gentle swirl of the ceiling fan that Mrs. Truman and her friends would convene

The president said he would often go upstairs and nap when the bridge games were in progress because the women didn't welcome nis kibitzing

Under a stipulation in Mrs. Truman's will, the second floor of the two-story home will not be open to the public as long as her daughter is alive. Mrs. Daniel was born in an upstairs "This is the house where I was born," Mrs.

Daniel said in a telephone conversatioo from ber home in New York, "and quite frankly I don't like seeing it opened up. Bul I won't be living there, and it would fall apart." Mrs. Truman bequeathed the home to the federal government in her will. President Ronald Reagan signed into law last year a bill to preserve the home as a national historic site, which gave the park service permanent authority to restore and maintain the home with federal money.

Reigle says about $500,000 will be spent this year on operating and restoring the home; which had been falling into disrepair. Truman probably would be curious about all

"I have wondered why so many people come from so far away and take so much trouble to look at the house where I live," he wrote after leaving the White House. "Perhaps it is because once a man has been president, he becomes an object of curiosity like those other notorious Missouri characters, Mark Twain and Jesse James.

Off and Running in Hong Kong

by Debra Weiner

ONG KONG—It is a tradition here that people from the trading houses race horses. Another tradition is that everyone else bets on them. Last year Hong Kong's 5.5 million Chinese staked more than 12 billion Hong Kong dollars (roughly $1.5 billion) at the season's 66 meetings. Other tracks may boast greater betting totals, but more is believed to be uncounted by one cash one than anywhere else in the world. vagered here on each race than anywhere else in the world.

wagered here on each race than anywhere else in the world.

"People live for racing here." says a Hong Kong racing journalist, Jim McGrath. "Every strata of society talks racing. Why? Hong Kong people have an insatiable appetite for gambling. It's in their nature. Just living life in Hong Kong is more or less a gamble."

He was referring to the fact that China will regain sovereignty over the colony in 1997, when Britain's 99-year lease expires. Most people feel that Hong Kong will retain many accorde of its life now but come.

feel that Hong Kong will retain many aspects of its life now, but once back in the fold, who knows what will happen? "Hong Kong itself is one big casino," McGrath says. And the track happens to be the only legal game in town.

After the Opium Wars of the 1840s, racing was ushered in by British officers who ran their army horses. Eventually the Royal Hong Kong Jockey Club organized gentlemen jockeys on a moreformal basis. But not until racing went professional in 1971 did the turf become an obsession.

The nonprofit Jockey Club controls the racing and betting facilities at both the Happy Valley track in the heart of commercial Hong Kong and the newer, more-bucolic Sha Tin course in the New-Territories, as well as 123 off-course betting booths and some 282,000 telephone betting accounts. After dividends are paid and expenses met, the surplus goes to charities. Last year nearly 350 million Hong Kong dollars were donated to various hospitals, clinics, schools, sport complexes, art centers. "In one way or another," McGrath says, "racing affects the entire population."

Or as the local truism goes: Power in Hong Kong resides in the Jockey Club, the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank and the governor in that order.

"It is said in jest, of course," insists Robert Locking, the Jockey Club's general manager. "You would expect a place like Hong Kong to be governed by the governor and fall under the considerable influence of the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank. I suppose it contains an iota of truth, but really it is just a boting old cliche."

Still, Locking admits, 'The Jockey Club is very rich and the people associated with the club are leading members of the community. If you wanted to sell an expensive brandy, I suppose you could not do better than acquire a mailing list of our 10,000 members.

"But of course," he continues quickly, "there are an awful lot of worthy people who are not members."

The elite own private boxes. The others, roughly 33,000 each race, pay from 2 Hong Kong dollars for standing room in the infield to 30 dollars for air-conditioned seats in the public stands. For 50 dollars, tourists holding a passport can sit in the members' enclosure at either

Regardless of one's viewpoint, however, what is seen is the same:
A half-dozen races, spaced half an hour apart, on either a sand or a grass oval. The meetings are held Saturday and Wednesday evenings through the end of May, after which the heat and humidity prevent

The Sha Tin course, built on reclaimed land stretching out into the bay, looks more like a park than a track, with hills as the picturesque backdrop. But it is the Happy Valley track, dominated though it is by skyscrapers, that most people think of when they think of going to the race.

The grass seed, the running rails — nearly everything is imported. The Jockey Club's 700-odd horses are brought over from Australia, New Zealand, Britain and Ireland. Stabled across from the track, they must first take on the automobile traffic before vying with each

The best racing in Asia used to be in Shanghai, but today, ontside of Japan, the facilities in Hong Kong are the best," observes George Moore over dinner in a hotel Australia's leading jockey until he retired in 1971, he is now, at age 60, Hong Kong's leading trainer.

"Of course, the quality of the horses is not as good as could be, but then racing here is strictly for social and gambling purposes. It doesn't pay to bring over really good horses." Among other reasons, they are not bred here since land is too expensive to maintain stud farms, "Most horses that are good make money by breeding," Moore explains, drinking his coffee.

"And then, you can't train them as hard as you do in a lot of countries. The heat gets them. If they dry-coat when galloping, they might have a heart attack. It's worse in Singapore, where it's more humid, but horses drop dead here too. So to race top horses would be

Those that do run, however, are treated royally. Stables are airconditioned and some trainers pipe music into the stalls to relax the horses although Moore prefers to put a sheep or cat in for company.

"But the main thing," he says, motioning for the bill, "is that everybody races. There's not much else to do here, so it has become the tradition. The races are all televised; the jockeys, the trainers, myself, are treated like celebrities; and the horses are. . . Yes," Moore interrupts himself, addressing the hovering waiter.

"Uh, excuse me," the young man says as he hands Moore the bill.

"But, uh, I was wondering about a tip." Moore pauses a moment, smiles and reaches into his pocket. Instead of cash, he pulls out a pen, and on the back of the bill, in big.

broad letters, writes: "Sundance in the first."

For a Shelter, It's the Cat's Meow

ANAAN, Connecticut — It's a $350,000 house, featuring a secluded view of the Housatonic River, high ceilings, lots of exposed wood and a stereo system playing music from Mick Jagger to Bach. Eventually a sun deck will be built.

The country estate, in northern Connecticut just below the Massachusetts state line, is home to about 125 cats,

The 35-acre (14-hectare) compound for abandoned cats was established by Pegeen Fitzgerald, who for almost 50 years had a daily New York radio talk show.

She is also head of the Vivisection Investigation League, which donated the money for the home, a 142-foot-long (43-meter) pavilion. Two more are envisaged by Fitzgerald. "I just think ordinary shelters where the animals are kept in a cage. . must be hard on the animals," she says.

But the project has provoked criticism from those who question why Fitzgerald lavishes so much concern and money on animals when people are living on the streets, in abandoned buildings or under highway overpasses.

She responds that loving animals is as much a part of being human as showing compassion for the homeless. "I was brought up to be very conscious of the fact that man has dominion over the creatures of the world, and we should take care of them," she says. Before a cat arrives in Canasa, it is vaccinated and examined by a veterinarian. While in residence, the cats routinely receive vitamin supplements and special food. Each day, three part-time staff members clean the floors of the house, wash the covers on the furniture and change the cat litter, which is purchased by the ton. Running the house costs about $10,000 a month.

Next, Fitzgerald is planning a crematorium and a cemetery where each animal would have a plot and small marker.

Fishing in Untroubled Waters

by William K. Stevens

RINAGAR, Kashmir - Every fisherman truly seduced by the sport, novice or expert, knows the feeling: all awareness, all consciousness, focuses on a single point in the water where the strike might come at any instant. Nothing breaks that laser beam of concentration when it is fixed with full intensity on a tiny artificial fly that you are working in short jerks against the current of a tumbling white-water river of crystalline clar-ity at the edge of the Himalayas, hoping to tantalize the trout of the Vale of Kashmir

Not even the beauty of the crisply defined Himalayan crags intrudes. Not the spectacle of rich green pine forests casting end-of-the-day shadows up the sides of the enclosing foothills. Not the soothing memory of the preceding days spent aboard a Kashmiri-carpeted bouseboat appointed in the style of the British rai. Not the small crowd of kibitzers, including spouse, watching you fish. Or the memory of the trout already caught that day, or the pros-pect of the feast of luscious pink meat they will yield. Or the aching fatigue that comes from a day of hopping over shoreline boulders and casting a fly line time after time in the thin air a mile and a half above sea level, so that you become afflicted by a case of what on another continent is called the Rocky Mountain Stupids and hang your casts in trees, more than ordinarily, and fear that you are about to

All this will be savored or suffered later, but

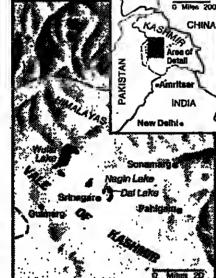

Wham! There is a silvery-gold flash in the water, and suddenly you are fast to a fish whose heavy, authoritative pull says that this trout, the last you will catch this day, will also be the best.

"Big fisb! Big fisb!" exults Mahmdoo, the grizzled guide who has been acting as fishing coach. The fish thrashes, runs downstream. jumps twice and is finally brought to a stub-born, stationary sulk near the shoreline boulders. The ghillie, a kind of caddy of the trout stream, scoops with the net and — oh, God, we'll lose him! — misses. He does not miss a second time, and 14 inches of brown trout, sleek, bandsome, mottled with black and red spots, comes ashore. It is a respectable fish on anybody's trout stream.

The scene is played in many variations countless times a year in the Kashmir Valley, an oasis of soft, green growth and sparkling water set like an emerald in the roof of the Vacationers from Europe, the United States and the plains of findia come to Kashmir for lots of reasons: to soothe the soul and restore perspective in a setting of sun-dappled lakes and thick forests. To breathe the clean, cool air and truck forests. To preathe the clean, cool air tinged by the tang of wood smoke and freshly cut timber. To ride languidly around Srinagar's Dal Lake in a needle-nosed gondola called a shikara. To be charmed by a handsome, sturdy people whose Persian heritage shows in their people whose remain nentage shows in their sharp features and luminous eyes; by a coun-inviside marked off hy precisely built, unmor-tared stone fences; by an architectural style half Alpine and balf Oriental. To buy Kashmiri rugs, clothes and handcrafts. To appreciate a mountain scene that evokes lots of places

- Switzerland and the Rockies are often mentioned — but at the same time proclaims its own harmonious and distinctive character.

People come to trek the lower regions of the mountains or, increasingly these days, to climb the higher reaches. Some explore the old city of Srinagar and the outlying villages with cam-eras. Some watch birds. One of the best ways to experience Kashmir, for those whose tastes run that way, is to settle in ooe of Srinagar's bundreds of bouseboats on either Dal Lake or Nagin Lake in something approaching vicere-gal style and comfort, then treat it as a base from which to make upcountry forays in search

It is not necessary to be an experienced or accomplished trout fisherman to make the resulting blend of the elegant and the rustic, the passive and the active, the contemplative and the purposeful, worthwhile. And once you get to Kashmir, the price is very right: the rupee equivalent of about $50 a day for food and shelter for two, with a large houseboat to yourself, plus about an equal amount for each fishing trip.

We stayed at Butt's Clermont Houseboats at the upper end of Dal Lake, away from the bustle of the main tourist center at the southern end. It is an operation run with im-peccable service and cleanliness, and a warm personal touch. The seven houseboats are clustered in a secluded spot that offers a splendid view of both mountains and lake, next to a broad lawn and garden, under towering chinar trees, 15 feet (4.5 meters) in diameter at the trunk. The trees were planted half a millennium ago by the Mogul emperor Akbar. The houseboats are pretty well set in place, snug against the shoreline, with permanent water and electrical connections and water heaters attached. All the expected comforts are there, plus some others: thick Kashmiri carpets, plusb furniture, a full-service dining room, a wood-burning stove that can be put in place on mornings and nights when it turns chilly or damp. At such times you relax in cozy warmth, listening to the rain on the roof and on the lake. And on such nights you will find a hot-water bottle between the sheets at bedtime.

The place is run by Gulam Butt. He took over in 1982 after the death of his father, who started the enterprise several decades ago and was known to hundreds of Western visitors, including many public figures. Personal atten-tion is the watchword, almost to the point of spoiling the guest. Butt is likely to invite you to his bouse one evening to sit on his carpeted floor and sbare a delicious Kashmiri meal.

reason for building a Kashmir vacation A around fishing is that, quite apart from the basic, visceral thrill of the sport, fishing offers a way to establish a particularly intimate con-nection with one's environment. Somehow, you come to feel more in harmony with a place by fishing in it.

And for otherwise competent but unexceptional anglers who, like me, have never worked up the courage to try fly fishing — the highest form of the sport — Kashmir is a good place to

You get a lot of help from people like Mahmdoo, full name Gulam Mohammed Ma-gree, who is one of the best things about Butt's houseboats. In his 70 or so years, Mahmdoo has learned about all there is to know about Kashmiri trout and how to catch them, and he is eager to share his knowledge. You get a lot of belp, too, from the ghillies who change flies for you, indicate the pools, carry your gear, string the fish and, in short, enable you to concentrate on the fishing without having to worry about all the things that will claim your energy and attention if you later want to fly-fish for trout elsewhere.

And because you have reserved your own section of the river for a whole day (under the British system of exclusive "beats," enforced by a government "watcher") you have no competition from other fishermen. Thus, the traveler who wants to see other parts of India, then lounge on a Kashmiri houseboat and do a little fishing on the side, finds the fishing arrangements very much in his favor.

One thing is absolutely necessary: Learn the rudiments of casting with a fly rod before you come. Contrary to common fears, it is not that difficult or time-consuming to get the hang of it. A good instruction book, an inexpensive glass rod eight-to-eight-and-a-half feet long with reel and line to match and a big lawn or stretch of park for practice are all you need.

I learned well enough to catch Kashmiri trout by practicing on my lawn in New Delhi during the winter, with the house cat acting the part of the trout and nabbing the unbarbed line with abandon. It is not necessary to bring any want to, since everything is provided. It might belp, though, to read up on the tactics and techniques of trout fishing.

The fishing season in Kashmir runs from April to October. Early-season fishing is of the under-water, or wet-fly, variety. Only artificial files are allowed, and each day each licensed angler can keep six fish, none shorter than 10 inches. In ember, when the snow-fed water has subsided, the big trout are more concentrated and easier to tempt, and dry-fly fishing becomes feasible

The 'Factory of the Future' Is Present Reality in Japan

By MARSHALL SCHUON

New York Times Service

EW YORK - The automobile has been high-tech and low-tech, but what it has been mostly is middle-tech, wallowing along as a conventional product - until the need for greater fuel economy prompted new materials

Given that impetus, the automobile today is in some ways what it was in its infancy, a device on the forward edge of innovation. It is a sophisticated collection of parts, of electronics, of onboard computers and intricate engine controls. Enormous amounts of money have been spent to infuse the product with the best quality while keeping the cost com-petitive. To that end, Detroit has followed the Japanese lead in automation and inventory control, and in soliciting ideas and mutually beneficial assistance from the labor

Meanwhile, GM is proceeding with plans for an automated, computerized plant.

U.S. cars are now built in much the same way as cars in Japan, but you still have to be up very early to beat the Japanese: They have computerized plants that can run at night without any workers on the factory floor. The first such factory to go into operation was the internal-combustion plant of Niigata Engineering Co., according to an executive who spoke recently at a London conference on world trends and prospects in manufacturing technology.

The executive, M. Eugene Merchant, is director of advanced manufacturing research at Metcut Research Associates, a metalstesting company in Cincinnati. He told delegates that Niigata's plant has been running 21 hours a day machining cylinder heads for diesel engines. The number of workers was reduced to 4 from 31, he said, and the number of machines required to make the parts was cut to 6 from 31: Another Japanese company, Fanuc Ltd., has begun almost wholly unmanned night operations in its production of robots and other tools. Mr. Merchant said the unattended system includes 22 machining centers served by robots that load and unload the parts from pallets. During the day, there are 19 workers on the machining floor," Mr. Merchant said. "At night, there is no one on the floor and only one person in the control room." In any 24-hour period, he added, the availability of the machines is nearly 100 percent, and utilization rates average 65 to 70 percent. Productivity has increased dramatically, and the factory now turns out 100 more robots, 75 more machining centers and 75 more wire-cut machines a month than it did before the new technology. Meanwhile, General Motors Corp. is moving ahead with plans for a completely automated, computer-based plant. Dan Stainforth, manager of the $52-million project for GM's Saginaw Steering Gear division, said the factory would assemble front-wheel-drive axles, beginning with a pilot facility in the autumn of 1985. The plant, next to the division's headquarters in Saginaw, Michigan, will reach full computerization and production two

"We think we have a competitive problem in the world mar-ket," Mr. Stainforth said, "so the driving force here is a need to be competitive. And the thing that really makes this the factory of the future is the tying together of various elements of the factory through computer integration."

As with the Japanese plants, he said, the factory will have the capability of running almost unmanned — although the company promises no one will lose a job as a result. "There will be no labor to load and unload machinery or move material," Mr. Stainforth said, "but there will be people necessary to monitor the activity and to program it and to maintain it."

As conceived, he said, the project will adapt an existing product line as a learning laboratory. "The output will be in addition to our current output," he said, "so we see it as being part of our plan to preserve our place in the market and to preserve our employment."

Early on, he said, GM invited the union local to participate in the project, and hourly workers have assisted with the planning.

Esmark Receives Merger Bid

Investment Firm Offers $2.3 Billion

The Associated Press CHICAGO — Esmark Inc., a large international holding company with revenue of $4.1 billion last year, announced Thursday that it had received a $2.28-billion cash merger offer from a New York investment firm.

Esmark said that Kohlberg Kravis & Roberts had offered it $55 for each of the 41,619,000 shares outstanding in the first quarter of 1984 ended Jan. 28, 1984. The executive committee of Esmark's board of directors was to meet Thursday to consider the offer.

KKR officials in New York refused comment on the reported of-

Earlier in the day, Esmark arranged a suspension of trading of its stock on the New York Stock Exchange pending a "significant announcement" Friday, Esmark stock rose $1.25 Wednesday, closing at $45.25. Esmark said any offer like KKR's "would be subject to cer-tain conditions, including the ar-rangement of necessary bank fiancing by KKR and the approval of the board of directors and stockholders of Esmark."

In the fiscal year ended Oct. 29, 1983, Esmark had $117.3 million in earnings on revenue of $4.1 billion. The company has more than 70,000 employees and ranks among the top 50 industrial corporations in the United States.

Esmark has interests in foods personal products, chemicals, vehi-cle rental, distilled spirits, cosmet-ics and fashion, high fidelity and industrial products. Its subsidiaries operate in more than 100 countries worldwide.

Currency Options Gain Popularity

Firms Try to Cut Risk of Shifts in Exchange Rates

By Bob Hagerty

LONDON - Union Carbide Corp. does not like gambling on the wisdom of currency forecast-

So when it bid last February for a Deutsche-mark-denominated contract to help build a petrochemical plant in the Mid-dle East, the U.S. chemical company went to one of its banks and bought insurance in the form of a currency option. Such options provide the right - but not the obligation - to buy or sell a currency at a given price during a set period.

"We really are exposed the minute we submit our bid," says Jeffrey Donahue, Union Carbide's director of international money management. Since February, defying most forecasts, the mark has dropped about 6 percent against the dollar. That drop has shrunk the dollar value of the proceeds Union Carbide will receive if it wins the contract. But the option will allow the company to sell marks, if necessary, at last February's more attractive rate.

Without the option, Mr. Don-ahue says, "I would have lost a bundle."

Currency options have been seeping into the consciousness of corporate treasurers for several years, but only in the past few months have they begin to catch on in a big way, changing the way that companies think about foreign-exchange risk.

From the moment of its purchase, an option gives a company a known limit on its currency risk: the cost of buying the option. If the market moves in the company's favor, it can discard the option and take advantage of the currency-translation gain. If not, the company cashes in on its

With such "nifty tricks," as Mr. Donahue puts it, risk-shy companies are more willing to pursue international business. For an up-front payment of a couple percent you can all go home and sleep at night," says

Currency trading at the Chicago Mercantile Exchange.

Doug McGregor, a currency dealer at Barclays Bank.

"The currency option," says Julian Harding of International Treasury Management, a joint venture of Hongkong & Shanghai Banking Corp. and Marine Midland Bank, "is the most important development of the past 10 years" in the foreign-exchange market.

While Mr. Harding's zeal is that of a salesman, more and more treasurers are taking to options. "They give you the security of position on the downside, and you still have the opportuni-ty to gain on the upside," says Trevor Harrison, deputy treasur-er at Imperial Chemical Industries PLC. For all its new popularity, the currency-option market remains a tiny fraction of the traditional

"forward" currency market. In the old days, Union Car-bide probably would have covered its risk by buying a forward contract, committing it to buy or sell the currency at a given rate on a specified date. If it did not win the contract, however, Uniou Carbide might have been stuck with an obligation to sell marks at an unattractive rate.

Because they involve less risk for the bank, forward contracts are much cheaper than options. Union Carbide paid about 1 per-cent of the face value for its 90-day option to sell the mark. On an annual basis, the company finds that options tend to cost I to 2 percentage points more than forward contracts.

The forward contract generally is more attractive when a company is sure of the timing and size of a foreign-currency risk and reasonably confident about the outlook for the currency, treasurers say. As the uncertainty rises, however, so does the appeal of the option.

The classic buyer of a currency option is, like Union Carbide, bidding for a contract that mvolves foreign-currency risk. But, says Mr. Donahue, "we're finding more and more uses for

The options can be used to cover all kinds of actual or potential outlays or income cross-border takeover bids, orders from foreign suppliers, dividends from overseas subsidiaries -whenever the risk seems worth the cost of the option. Bankers say they also sell options to investment managers who, for example, expect the dollar to dive eventually but do not want to miss out on high U.S. bond vields in the meantime.

"It has fairly universal appeal - from the big boys right through to the small chaps," says Mr. McGregor of Barclays.

If the big boys and small chaps are starting to buy options, though, they are nowhere near satisfying all of the banks and brokers willing to sell or arrange European-based sellers of op tions, whose number swells by the week, include Hill Samuel & Co., Hambros Bank, Barclays, (Continued on Page 13, Col. 1)

Thomson Plans Bond Issue to Aid Ailing Unit

By Axel Krause

International Herald Tribune PARIS -- Thomson SA, France's largest electronics company, will soon offer 1.2 billion francs ($144 million) in bonds convertible into equity of an important but ailing subsidiary, Thomson's chairman, Alain Gomez, said Thursday.

The move is believed to be the first of its kind since the Socialist government in 1981 nationalized 11 leading industrial groups, in-cluding Thomson, Mr. Gomez and other company executives said the bond issue is part of a government-backed effort to restore the nationalized companies to profitability by

The subsidiary is Thomson-CSF, which, though government-con-trolled, has shares traded on the Paris Bourse. Industry Minister Laurent Fabius has repeatedly warned chief ex-ecutives of the nationalized compa-nies that they risk losing their jobs if they do not report profits by 1985. The only exceptions are the ailing steel companies Usinor and Thomson will begin moving out of the red in the second half of 1984, following a corporate reorganization last year, but expects to report a loss for the year on a projected sales increase of about 8 percent. Mr. Gomez said at a news conference

The goal is to have positive results in 1985, and this is attainable," he added.

Last year Thomson reduced its estimated net loss to about 1.25 billion francs from 2.2 billion in 1982. Consolidated sales, unadjusted for last year's acquisitions and disposals of subsidiaries, rose to 56.3 billion francs from 47 billion francs in 1982, Adjusted, sales totaled 50.8 billion francs.

Mr. Gomez, who became chairman in 1982, said the earnings improvement would continue throughout 1984 "at the same pace" as in 1983, "so we move from red to black in the second part of this year." Responding to questions about the bond offering, he and other many's Teleful executives said it was intended to tronics group.

had a negative net worth of 550 million francs at the end of last year after a net loss of 892 million francs for the year. largely in the ailing components sector.

In 1982, Thomson-CSF had a 1.9-billion-franc loss. A senior Thomson executive said that "it represents a bankrupt situation, which we intend to correct by the offering." He said Thomson-CSF's net worth would total 650 million francs after the operation is completed at the end of this year.

Of the 1.2 billion francs in bonds being offered, half will be sub-scribed to by Thomson SA and half will be offered to the public. Terms and other details, such as the share prices of conversion, will be decided by the boards of Thomson and its subsidiary May 22 and May 23, respectively, company executives

About half of Thomson-CSF's 10 million outstanding shares remained in private hands after the nationalization of the parent company, previously known as Thomson-Brandt. They have traded on the Bourse recently at about 340 francs a share. "We are convinced that the offering will be a success, since there are many investors interested, both inside and outside France," said Christian Aubin, Thomson's financial director. By the end of the year, through the conversions, the num-ber of Thomson-CSF shares outstanding will have risen to about 13.5 million, he said.

In related moves, Thomson will attempt to restore profitability in key sectors, including components and medical equipment, mainly through management streamlining and continuing substantial investments, Mr. Gomez said. This year, he said, the group's total industrial investments will rise 28 percent from the 1983 adjusted level of 2.5 billion francs.

The adjustments take account of such moves as last year's transfer of Thomson's telecommunications business to Cie. Generale d'Electricite and its acquistion of West Ger-many's Telefunken consumer elec-

Sweden Doubles FRN. Lowers Interest Offered

Mr. Engstrom said proceeds of the borrowing would be used to retire expensive loans and stretch out the repayment schedule of Sweden's foreign debt.

"In terms of our shaving peaks in repayment, we have done that by $2.5 billion so far," Mr. Enstrom said. He indicated that, in future borrowings, Sweden would look primarily for opportunities to re-duce the cost of its foreign debt.

"If we see an opportunity for a deal that can reduce costs and ex-tend maturities we might do it," he

Mr. Engstrom said he could not give a precise indication of how much the latest borrowing and other recent "debt-management activi-ties" had affected Sweden's for--debt service costs. But before the FRN issue was increased, a high-level Swedish official estimated that Sweden was reducing its foreign debt service costs by about 250 million kronor ($31.25 million) a year.

Debt office figures from the fis-cal year that ended June 30, 1983, showed that Sweden's debt pay-ments would peak in 1985-89. Dollar loan repayments were to peak in 1988, the figures showed.

Most Major U.S. Airlines Increase Their Fares

By Agis Salpukas New York Times Service

NEW YORK - Most major U.S. airlines, led by American Airlines, have raised their fares, as of May 1.

American based the increases on a comprehensive plan that it intro-duced in March 1983 that links fares to distance traveled, eliminating many discount fares. That plan was also adopted by most of the other U.S. airlines.

The round of increases comes at a time when air traffic has been rising and the industry is becoming optimistic about the summer travel

The major impact of the increases was on trips of 2,000 miles (3,200 kilometers) or more. The price of such trips went up one cent a mile plus a 1.8-percent federal

Improvement Predicted For Irish GDP in '84-88

LONDON - Ireland's gross domestic product is expected to grow at an annual average rate of 3.2 percent between 1984 and 1988, marking a recovery from the recession of the past four years, the Economist Intelligence Unit, a private forecasting body, said Thursday in a report. The GDP is a measure of the total value of a Call free from U.S. 1-800-237-0892 Call free from Rondo: 1-800-282-0892 Lowell Eastern welcomes you book! nation's goods and services, excluding income from foreign in-

But projected growth will be lower than the average rates of the 1960s and 1970s, the group said, From almost no growth last year, it said, Ireland's GDP will expand by 2.5 to 3 percent a year in 1984 and 1985, with possibly a small slowdown in 1985.

Manager Returns to U.K. Digital

Geoff Shingles has returned to the post at Digital Equipment that he held eight years ago. But that job has changed almost as much as the computer industry itself.

"It's not whether I'm too big for the job, but whether I'm big enough," said Mr. Shingles, who recently took over for a second time as head of Digital Equipment Co., the British subsidiary of the U.S.-based computer maker, Digital Euroment Corp.

Mr. Shingles, 45, who joined Digital in Britain in 1965, when it was a three-man operation" said, when I left the company in 1976 it was less than a third of the size it is today." He said the British operations, with volume last year of £210 million ($294 million), accounted for about 10 percent of Digital's Mr. Shingles, an Englishman, noved to Geneva in 1976 after nine continue as managing director-invears at the head of the British unit. At Digital's European headquar-ters, he served as vice president, European marketing, and most re-cently was responsible for Digital's operations in "11 small countries"

As Alexis Carrington Colby in "Dynasty,"

Joan Collins is the Evita of prime-time, a Medea with lip gloss, who both uses and loves her children as she entices and swats lovers to and from her bosom. In "Past Imperfect" Collins is equally randy — a woman whose wit serves as her armor while she collects a gallery of male slaves with the uncompromising greed of a Nana. What Collins choreographs here is a world of romance and Beautiful People glamour, sets it in motion, and then proceeds to teeter vicariously on its perimeter, falling off occasionally in moods of high-fashion despair and extravagant sorrows. It is the fodder of the prime-time TV serials of the '80s, whose fantasy heroines seem to have no problems retaining a ridiculous number of available handsome men under the modern of the prime time. thumb, while — more to the point — keeping pabulum and pizza stains off those immaculate Nolan Miller gowns. And just as "Dynasty,"

"Dallas," and "Falcon Crest" are camp versions of the daytime soaps, "Past Imperfect" is an all-out buriesque of the bookcase full of joyless, exasperating memoirs by temale Hollywood stars who present themselves as noble, willfully passive leads in their own angst-rid-

Collins is hyberbolic, amusingly so, even operatic on occasion, but her story is told with a self-deprecating, literary-courtesan flourish. She begins at the beginning — whatever that is, since Collins takes the position that a woman who would reveal her age would reveal any thing. "Thus spake Oscar Wilde," she writes (Collins, who recently graced the pages of Playboy, is 50. Thus spake Simon and Schus ter, her publisher.) The half-lewish, raven haired beauty is seen growing up in London dodging Nazi air raids and stepping over excit ed male students ("The ones who flocked after me were of no interest") at the Royal Academy of Dramatic Art.

The clusive, pert 17-year-old Collins is finally caught in a web spun by a nefariously handsome British film star. The matinee ido ("black brooding eyes, thick wavy black hair lips cruel, thick and wet") fixes her a scottland Coke in his bachelor pad and hands her a brown-paper wrapped book, which turns cit to be percognizely. She drains the class. to be pornography. She drains the glass — ar alleged mickey — and passes out. When she wakes np. Collins is violently nauscous and nc longer a virgin. ("I've been drigged and rapec and abused by a 33-year-old degenerate film star and I hated it.") When the star drops he off at her parents, he asks her if he will see her again. "Of course," Collins replies. Collins marries her alleged rapist, but unlike the thousands of heroines of penny dreadfu paperback rape seduction extravaganzas, she finds chauvinist splendor a bitter pill and divorces him seven months later.

In trouble with 20th Century Fox after refusing inappropriate vehicles, she drowns her problems in Chianti and cannelloni when War ren Beatty comes to the rescue. Collins finds herself in a state of exquisite indecision, finally giving in to Beatty's entreatments. "Don't go Butterfly," Beatty is quoted as begging, "Don' leave your bee." A seven-year marriage to Anthony Newley follows, highlighted by indiscretions by both parties, (Ryan O'Neal is Col-lins's achilles heel.) Then Collins stages-a comeback in the sancy B-fihns "The Stud" and The Bitch, produced by Collins' third husband, and based on the novels of her sister Jackst ("Hollywood Wives") Collins.

This takes us up to the point in the late "70s where the British bestselling "Past Imperfect left off. The revised version is less explicit. deleting most of the expletives from the leading lady dialogue as well as cutting short the de-scriptions of romantic interludes with Harry Belafonte and others. The additions — 2 chronicle of the failure of her third marriage and a behind-the-scenes peek at "Dynasty" are welcome but Collins' penchant for hyper-bole gets really out of hand. (One could hardly characterize Henry Kissinger's cameo on "Dy-nasty" as a "moment of television history.")

"Past Imperfect" is caustic glitz and tacties: glitter: open it at any page and a priceles: pensee falls out onto your lap. ("I am a strong advocate of monogamy — sequentially, that is.") Joan Collins and her sister Jackie may no be the Brontes — but then the Brontes never brought much to a party. "Past Imperfect" is the fun book of the season.

race's 110 years. To Lukas, Althea's development

Lukas Has a New Favorite Filly

By Andrew Beyer Washington Post Service

LOUISVILLE, Kentucky When Althea, a filly, ran away from her male rivals to win the Arkansas Derby, her trainer, Wayne Lukas, was almost as pleased by the crowd reaction as by the victory itself.

"Everybody went wild when she came out of the winner's circle. All the women had bet on her, and she won over the men. She was the people's choice." Lukas paused and smiled. Twe had the other kind, you know.

Last year, Lukas trained the infamous Marfa, who was dubbed Marfa the Mugger for his habit of trying to knock down other horses. And in 1980, he trained one of the blackest villains in thoroughbred history — Codex, who alleged bumped the filly Genuine Risk in that controversial Preakness.

"The Monday after the Preakness," Lukas recalled, "I got a mes-sage that I had some mail at the stable gate. There was a bag of 300 telegrams waiting for me. I read 20 of them, and when I was 0 for 20, I stooped

So Lukas has enjoyed the unfamiliar role of being a good guy at Churchill Downs this week, and he relishes what he sees as the best chance he has ever had to win the Kentucky Derby. "Yon always hope that a three-year-old will come around and hit his peak at Derby time — not a couple months early, not a couple months late." In the Arkansas Derby, Althea indicated to Lukas that she is doing just that, and he is not alone in this assessment. Althea, who will run in for the Fantasy Stakes at Oaklawn the derby Saturday as part of an and then for Friday's Kentucky entry with another filly, Life's Oaks at Churchill but the filly Magic, is favored to join Regret made him alter his plans. Although (1915) and Genuine Risk (1980) as she lost the Fantasy, she encoun-into a top racehorse has always seemed somewhat providential. In the early months of 1983, the trainer was emotionally devastated by the death of his unbeaten, champi on filly, Landaluce. He thought that loss had deprived him of the opportunity of a lifetime. But then. Althea came along.

In July, she beat colts by 10 lengths at Hollywood Park. In September, she beat members of her own sex by 15 lengths at Del Mar.

Knowledgeable West Coast handicappers thought she was better than Landaluce. Althea finished Lukas has been enjoying a probthe year with a five-for-nine record and won the Eclipse award as the U.S. champion 2-year-old filly.

Still, Lukas was not thinking too seriously about the Kentucky Derby, because he knows there is a predictable cycle in the development of male and female thorough-

"When horses are two," he said, "the fillies are equal to the colts in the summertime; sometimes they are even superior. But they start losing ground [in physical development] at three. If they are very exceptional, they may get back to equality late in their 3-year-old season or when they're four." This theory is confirmed by experience: Only eight fillies have won U.S. Triple Crown races; in the Prix de l'Arc de Triomphe, Europe's pre-mier race run in October, seven fillies or mares have won in the past

Lukas decided to point Althea

tered so much trouble and ran so fast that Lukas concluded she could beat the colts in the Arkansas

Derby one week later. The filly toyed with the other speed horses in the field, sitting outside them as she set a leisurely pace. Then she accelerated entering the final turn and drew away so strongly that even the confirmed stretch-runners in the field could not gain on her. She won by seven lengths and equaled the track re-cord of 1:46 4-5 for 1 1-8 miles, leaving little doubt in Lukas' mind

Lukas has been enjoying a prob-lem-free week with Althea at Churchill Downs, but since the filly has been here, she has not behaved like America's sweetheart. "She's like a bratty kid," Lukas said. "We discipline her but she doesn't take it. She doesn't like people fooling around with her."

■ Post Positions for Derby

The track handicapper at Churchill Downs on Thursday made Althea a 5-2 favorite and Swale was dropped to second pick at 3-1 because of the heavy rains at the track. United Press International reported. Swale has not performed well in mud.

The field from the rail out, following Thursday's draw, is: Althea, 5-2; Raja's Shark, 20-1; Bear Hunt, 20-1; So Vagne, 12-1; Life's Magic, 5-2; Fight Over, 20-1; Fali Time, 12-1; Bedouin, 12-1; Rexson's Hope, 12-1; Taylor's Special, 7-2; Silent King, 15-1; Vanlandingham, 10-1; Secret Prince, 12-1; At The Threshold, 20-1; Swale, 3-1; Majestic Shore, 12-1; Biloxi Indian, 12-1; Pine Circle, 10-1; Coax Me Chad, 12-1; and Gate Dancer, 15-1.

The Need for Enemies

By Russell Baker N EW YORK — Having always thought of myself as just about the nicest fellow you'd ever want to meet. I was astonished recently to discover I had an enemy. Never mind who it was, or how I found out; that's not important. The important thing is what I discovered about myself. I was furious. It was outrageous that this man could not perceive what a splendid human being he had chosen to stalk. Was the fool blind and deaf? If he had taken pains to inquire, surely everybody would have told him he was mistaken, for there isn't a finer person alive than 1.

When outrage against the injus-tice of the man's position subsided, I undertook a campaign to draw his fangs and win his heart. Though he was a person for whom I had never cared much — in lact, I had always heartily disliked him - I took pains to treat him affectionately, invited him to lunches and picked up the tab, and praised him lavishly to his face and behind his back.

Nothiog succeeded. On the grapevine I have since heard he is boasting around town that he is "toying cleverly" with me and en-joying the innocence in which I am being led in my own destruction.

Many people would enjoy having him for an enemy, for he is not only a ridiculous blowhard, but also an ass. Not me. I am worse than Willy Loman: For me it is not enough to be liked, or even well liked; I have to be thoroughly liked.

This is a depressing discovery, for people who are afraid to make enemies almost never amount to much, and people who want to be liked by absolutely everybody often end up — like Lyndon Johnson — thoroughly, if unjustly, despised by multitudes.

One of the most successful men I know exults in the enemies he has made and becomes worried and annoyed by evidence that anyone likes him. It makes him fear he is

The need to be liked and the need to have enemies probably define two extremes of an American neurosis. They reflect an abnormal concern with the decent opinion of mankind, a concern that does not greatly occupy the British, say, or the French, or the Chinese, all people much less obsessed than Americans with the link between salesmanship and a winning personality. During former President Nix-on's recent television interviews, 1 was struck again by how important enemies are to him. He has always ascribed his defeats to the viciousness of his enemies without ever crediting them for his successes, for his followers were the people who loved him most for the enemies he

No politician ever complained more about his enemies. The easy conclusion is that the incessant talk about them betrayed a deep yearning to be universally liked. Perhaps so, but this desire, if it once existed. was submerged at the very start of his career when he discovered that playing the nice guy would oot work in the mean politics of red

For his ecemies, who still abound, the irony is that they could probably have destroyed him only by treating him as a swell fellow. A man who could thrive only on enemies, he might have come unlatched and turned into a bumbler if the life-enhancing environment of enmity had been eliminated.

President Reagan, by contrast, likes to be liked. He is probably as distressed as I am by the mere thought of an enemy in the hushes. Routine political attacks, the usual malarkey of charge and denunciation, seem to hurt rather than energize him. When asked to respond, his manner always seems to say, "Gosh, how could anybody say something like that about one of the sweetest guys that ever went down the pike?"

Reagan wouldn't know what to do with an enemy if he had one. Like me, I suppose, he would probably ask him to the White House for tea and jellybeans.

Does this contradict my theory that people who are reluctant to make enemies rarely amount to much? I don't think so. It's true the Reagan administration has made enemies galore, but very few people seem to blame the president for his administration, possibly because very few believe he has much to do with it.

And if you become president but don't run the shop, have you really —aside from the honor of the thing - amounted to very much?

Huck's Hometown Still Bears the Mark of Twain

By Andrew H. Malcolm New York Times Service

HANNIBAL, Missouri — You don't know about the adventures of Huckleberry Finn without you have read a book of that name by a man named Mr. Mark Twain. He told the truth, mainly. There was things which he stretched, but mainly he told the truth. But that ain't no matter. Truth or not, this year is the 100th anniversary of the publication of "The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn," a vernacular volume of 19th-ceotury teen-age mischief and misadventure, along with serious social satire, that has enriched the lives of millions of readers. Its publication forever changed the course of American literature and the life of this small Mississippi River city in north-eastern Missouri, where the names of real landmarks have even been changed to match their ficcional names.

Since that day a century ago when the first copies were sold in London, generations of young-sters and adults have sneaked out at night with Huck and Tom Sawyer and the gang as they planned to become robbers and "ransom" people, although they did not ily to live up to the imagination of know what that meant.

Readers met Becky Thatcher, Tom's sweetheart, and Aunt Polly and the Duke and the feuding Grangerfords and Shepherdsons. They drifted with Huck and Jim, the runaway slave, on a raft down the powerful river that so shaped life oo this land. It seemed an a boy could do was tell a lie or smoke a corncob pipe, and scolding aunts led miscreants away by the ear.

known to readers as St. Petersburg, and went on to pilot a riverburg, and went on to pilot a river-boat, go broke trying to get rich out West and finally write "Huck-leberry Finn" and many more books under the pen name Mark Twain. Tom Blankenship, the real-life model for the fictional Huck, wandered out to the Western territories and died there. Cle-mens's mother, the model for Aunt Polly, moved to Iowa with his brother, Orion, the model for Upwards of 250,000 visitors a year travel here to see the Twain museum, watched over by its curator, Henry Sweets, and the tiny preserved Clemens home, where the author spent a childhood absorbing enough memories, scenes and patent medicines to fill two innocent era when the worst thing adventure books about growing up. The other day, Sonja Dahl-budding brought her 14 students all the way from Hagen, West Germany, where Huck and Tom Considerable has changed.

Samuel L. Clemens, the son of a judge and unsuccessful merchaot, left Hannibal, better at home in our childhood fanta-

> "Huckleberry Finn" was a revolutionary book, part of a major movement to literary realism. Freed by Twam's example from traditional literary conventions, uncounted writers took American literature in fresh new directions. "All modern American literature comes from one book by Mark Twain called 'Huckleberry Finn," wrote Ernest Herningway

The city of 18,811 people tucked between two bluffs 100 miles north of St. Louis remains an agricultural supply center. The shoe factories are gone. Railroad jobs are down. And many young people move away after graduation. But thousands of tons of grain still move out on the river.

And there is always Mark Twain tourism, which is estimated to pump $40 million into Hannibal's economy each year. Tour-ists can see the Mark Twain riverboat, the Tom 'n' Huck Motel, the Becky Thatcher Restaurant, Jackson's Island, where Tom and Huck were given up for dead, and the Mark Twain cave, where they did not have to pay $5 to go
